empty spaces. That's by design."

He said the move would mean transferring about 82 students. He said the school's classrooms contain between 21 and 22 students and are spacious — 900 square feet for the elementary grades and 1,200 square feet for the kindergarten classes.

The ELC program would use one or two classrooms for the 90 to 100 students.

Moving the sixth graders in the advanced placement (APC) program would involve about 100 students and use four or five rooms.

"That would be only a temporary measure to alleviate the overcrowding at Central," Connolly emphasized. That program presently uses four classrooms. Once the new comprehensive Quincy High School is constructed and the present Quincy High is refurbished, Central School would be moved into the upgraded building and the old Central School would be closed.

"That would keep enrollment down so that the school would not have to use the third floor," said Connolly.

Although Connolly outlined the three proposals as options, Quincy Education Association president Paul Phillips said he understood that Creedon was considering implementing all of them.

If the fifth grade were moved out of the Marshall School next year, Connolly said a couple of grade levels would be reconfigured.

"Title I shares a room," he said. "Space in an elementary school is used up very quickly."

He said presently there are five first, second and third grade classes and four fourth and fifth grade classes at Marshall.

A task force of about 25 was established about two weeks ago to look at student assignments and enrollments for next year. It includes principals, teachers, central office staff and parent representatives who met last Thursday. Marshall parents received notices of Wednesday's meeting last week.

"It's just coming to the public's attention," said Connolly who added he expected the issue to be addressed at the March 17 school committee meeting.

"There is an untested admission here," said Phillips. "The Marshall School is too small already. That could have been anticipated, but it only opened in September. Theoretically there could have been a lot of move-ins. I'd like to cut a little slack."

Under his plan Creedon expects the Point-Webster Middle School to house between 400 and 420 students, although the school could accommodate a maximum enrollment of 600.

Creedon estimates if all of the Quincy Point students entering the sixth, seventh and eighth grades next fall attend Point-Webster, they would total only 230 students and use 17 rooms.

"Point-Webster is a big building," said Phillips. "The auditorium several years ago was converted to a library, and that's being restored as an auditorium. You don't do that if you have a space problem."

"Yet I can understand the concerns of the parents and of the teachers. Parents are concerned about having fifth graders in a building with eighth graders, but the superintendent plans to segregate them from the older kids and have playgrounds on opposite sides of the building. It's not that bad of a deal."

"And parents of students in the APC program don't want their kids to go to Point-Webster for two years and then Central for seventh and eighth grade. They will miss that part of the experience of being a kid."

In addition, teachers at Central School are upset, he said. "Gene plans to close of the third floor. Even if it is an old decrepit building, it's their old building. And moving always is difficult."

"I give Gene credit; he's listening. It's a tough situation," said Phillips, noting that redistricting "offends just about everybody and drawing new lines doesn't work in Quincy."

GET IN TUNE

It used to be that car owners could look forward to having their cars tuned up at regular intervals to ensure that they ran properly. Now, new vehicles regularly come off the showroom floor with the promise of no tune-ups needed for 100,000 miles. While no one is questioning the validity of this claim, this does not mean car owners should not have their cars undergo an annual underhood tune-up type inspection. This check-up should be undertaken with the idea of inspecting parts that require cleaning, adjustment, or replacement. Just because a vehicle claims to have an extended tune-up period does not mean that the adage about an ounce of prevention being worth a pound of cure does not apply.

LEO & WALT'S SUNOCO is very proud of our ASE Certified technicians and of the equipment they have on hand to properly service every system of your car. Whether your car needs a simple tune-up or major repairs, see us first. If you are in the market for superior service that you can count on, then see us today at 258 Quincy Ave., E. Braintree (781-843-1550). Open: Mon.-Fri. 6am-9pm, Sat. 7am-9pm, Sun. 9am-5pm. We are "A Place Where Your Car Can Live Longer." Sunoco and most major credit cards honored. We're your local source for propane for grills, motor homes, and converted vehicles.

HINT: Because a bad ground can cause all kinds of drivability problems, every engine electrical/electronic ground should be regularly checked and tightened.

SCOTT DEWARE

A Thought For The Week

We all make many promises during our lifetime. These promises deal with all things, in every phase of life. Knowing what or whom to believe can and does pose problems at times.

Careless promises should never be given -- or counted upon. A promise that can cause discomfort, harm or injustice to yourself -- or to others -- should never be made, no matter how much prodding or persuasion is involved.

It is usually very easy to make a promise... Expediency or change of mind is seldom a justified excuse for breaking a promise. A promise involves honor, duty and ethics... The best promise you can make -- is a promise to yourself... Promise yourself you will never make a promise to anyone, unless you are fully prepared and able to keep your promise... In addition to spiritual benefit, it is a good way to gain honor, stature, praise and prestige among your fellow human beings...

Reconfiguring Parishes Does Not Mean Closing Them

asked the planning office staff to meet with him and the auxiliary bishops to review the possibility of reconfiguring the parishes. And he asked each cluster of parishes to develop a pastoral plan for the future.

"Central headquarters would like a plan to surface from the cluster rather than they tell us that this is the way we should go," he said.

"There really isn't a timetable. It's in the future," said Fr. Graham, suggesting within the next three to six years changes will be made. "We have to work on this now," he said.

In his letter, the cardinal urged that the pastoral plan focus on fulfilling the church's mission — taking care of the needs of the parishioners and making the sacraments available.

"The number one priority is to be an outreach in the Quincy area as best we can, to make sure schools are maintained and the parishioners served."

"We're looking at ways we can collaborate better within the Quincy cluster of parishes."

He pointed out that several programs already are collaborative, such as marriage preparation, formerly pre-cana, for couples and the adult confirmation program which involves young adults in their 20s and 30s.

"Some parishes already are teaming up in the cluster with regard to religious education programs, especially in the smaller parishes — Houghs Neck, Germantown, Merrymount and Squantum," he said.

For a recent parish mission for Lent, the faithful moved from one parish to another each night for the four evenings. The result was that instead of 50 gathering at an individual church there were a couple of hundred coming together for a Lenten renewal program, he said.

Collaborative efforts could be established among the three subclusters, he suggested. Those include Sacred Heart in North Quincy, St. Ann's in Wollaston and Star of the Sea in Squantum in subcluster A; St. Mary's in West Quincy, St. John's in Quincy Center and St. Joseph's in Quincy Point in subcluster B, and the so-called peninsula parishes, Blessed Sacrament in Houghs Neck, St. Boniface in Germantown and Our Lady of Good Counsel in Merrymount in subcluster C.

In addition to the shortage of priests, the demographics of the city have changed the number of parishioners.

This was true from the beginning when St. Mary's was first established in 1840 to meet the spiritual needs of the quarry workers. As the city grew, so did the number of Catholics, and St. John the Baptist Church was founded in 1863.

Just after the turn of the century, in 1903, Sacred Heart Church was built. In quick succession, Most Blessed Sacrament opened in 1915, St. Joseph's Church two years later and St. Ann's in 1922. In 1938, Our Lady of Good Counsel was founded, followed by Star of the Sea in 1945 and St. Boniface in 1956.

Today, slightly more than 49,140 parishioners belong to Quincy's Catholic churches, according to the Archdiocese's most recent figures for the year ending June 30, 1998.

Fr. Graham believes the Quincy churches possess a hopeful future. "We are working together," he said. "Previously we were very insular, when each parish had more than enough staff and priests and nuns did everything."

"Involving the laity in key positions today has relieved the clergy of some of their priestly responsibilities," he continued. There are married deacons doing pastoral work, assisting at baptisms and weddings, preaching and offering prayers at wakes, he said.

Those trained in an archdiocesan program of formation serve as pastoral associates and do the work of a priest except the sacramental work. They visit the sick and help with religious education as well as prepare people for the sacraments and counsel parishioners.

The pastoral plan will identify where staffing of the resident priests can be reduced, said Fr. Graham. For example, he said, there is one priest at each of the churches in Houghs Neck, Germantown and Merrymount, but, say, in two years or five years from now, there may be only two priests to cover those three parishes. They will have to work as a team.

"We won't be able to put in a full-time resident pastor in every situation, especially in the smaller parishes. Where sacramental index — the total number of baptisms, weddings and funerals — is low, below 100, that church may be assigned a part-time priest, a priest who may also have another job in the Chancery or serves as a chaplain at Archbishop Williams High School, Fr. Graham explained.

"This is a long-range plan," he said. "The clergy have been working on this for several years, and in the small parishes, they know the direction they have been working on. They have been told this through bulletins, workshops. The very fact that they have been collaborating" indicates that the parishes may change.

He said the parochial schools would not be impacted by any reconfiguration. "There is a great demand for parochial education. The challenge there is to keep the tuition reasonable so people can send their children there as students and to provide a just wage to the faculty," he said.

"We've only just begun the process, but it has been ongoing for a long time," said Fr. Graham. The cardinal's letter, he said, "was to clarify to some places that they have to come up with a course of action soon. We're not looking at twinning or combining big, big parishes," he said.

Worker Suffers Third-Degree Burns In Plant Flash Fire

A flash fire Tuesday morning at the Twin Rivers Technologies Plant left one Quincy-born employee hospitalized with third-degree burns.

Joseph Conte, 32, of Hanover, was being treated at Massachusetts General Hospital where he was listed in critical condition at press time.

Twin Rivers processes animal fat and natural oils into soap and rubber products. It is located at the foot of the Fore River Bridge, in the former Procter and Gamble Plant.

The fire began while workers thawed pipes in which fatty substances had congealed due to the cold temperatures, according to Fire Chief Thomas Gorman. He said the fat escaped the tank around 3:30 a.m. and ignited a flashover which shot up the roof of the building, escaping the reach of the sprinklers.

The effect ignited a smoldering fire in the dense roof planking.

Sprinklers were able to quash the initial fire, but firefighters were unable to extinguish the roof fire until steam had cleared.

The building contained storage tanks, surrounded by catwalks, for tallow products.

With the company since 1995, Conte is a refinery technician who grew up in the Houghs Neck section of Quincy. He graduated Quincy High School in 1985 and later graduated the Massachusetts Maritime Academy.

Conte is the brother-in-law of Peter DiBona, a Quincy firefighter, and had many friends in the fire department who arrived at the scene.

Twin Rivers spokesperson Nancy J. Sterling said she does not know whether Conte was involved in thawing the pipes when the blaze occurred.

The cause of the accident remains under investigation, according to Sterling.

The plant closed for the day on Tuesday and offered counseling to its employees. At press time, it was expected to re-open Wednesday.

Gorman stressed that Twin Rivers runs a safe operation.

He said that investigators from the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration had been involved, as well as investigators from the state Fire Marshall's Office.

Delahunt Opposes Proposed 'Know Your Customer' Rules

Having heard from hundreds of constituents about proposals that could compromise the privacy of individual's banking transactions, Congressman William Delahunt decries so-called "Know Your Customer" rules under review by federal legislators.

During a hearing of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Commercial and Administrative Law, on which he serves, Delahunt spoke strongly against the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) proposal to require banks to develop formal policies to identify "unusual transactions" in customer's accounts. The rules were designed to help federal law enforcement authorities prevent money laundering and other illegal transactions, but have sparked public outcry against privacy concerns.

Delahunt said the depth of concern about the proposal is a "message that has been sent loud and clear in the form of 135,000 public comments to the FDIC."

Delahunt said: "The message certainly has something to do with the specifics of this particular proposal. But it has even more to do with a growing feeling in the public mind that we are losing control over the most private aspect of our personal lives—from our most intimate association to our reading habits, from our medical history to the genetic code that makes us who we are.

"Financial institutions are already required by law to report suspicious activity that comes to their attention. There is nothing new in that. But there is a world of difference between requiring those institutions to report possible criminal violations and ordering them to profile millions of innocent account holders in order to ferret them out. The first says only that corporations must not turn a blind eye to illegal activities; the second seeks to turn them into the eyes and ears of the law enforcement community... "Even without these new rules, existing law already authorizes banks to spy on their customers to an unacceptable degree... It is time to consider what we do to the fabric of a civil society when we enlist private entities as adjuncts of law enforcement. What does it mean to the workplace environment when we turn employers into agents of the immigration service? What does it mean for the doctor-patient relationship when we encourage patients to inform on their doctors? How do we strike a proper balance between the legitimate needs of law enforcement and the values of a free society?

"By now it is clear—even to the proponents—that the "know your customer" rules fail to strike that balance. Should they be issued in anything like their present form, it would be my intention to file a resolution of disapproval pursuant to the Congressional Review Act."

1999 SOCIAL SECURITY CHANGES ANNOUNCED

Social Security Commissioner Kenneth S. Apfel announced that Social Security and Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits will increase 1.3 percent in 1999 as a result of the annual cost-of-living adjustment (COLA). The increase will begin with benefits that Social Security beneficiaries receive for December 1998. Increased payments to SSI recipients will begin on December 31. The automatic increase is equal to the December 1986 increase, the lowest since the automatic adjustment became effective in 1975.

MEDICARE COSTS INCREASE FOR 1999

The 1999 increases in the costs payable by Medicare beneficiaries—the Part A hospital insurance deductible and the Part B medical insurance premium—were announced this month. The Part A deductible for beneficiaries admitted to hospitals in 1999 will be $768, up from this year's $764. The monthly Part B premium will increase to $45.50 a month, up from $43.80. The deductible and the premium are recalculated each year to reflect changes in the costs of health care or changes in Medicare law.

NEW OPTIONS FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES

Starting in January, 1999, Medicare beneficiaries will be able to choose from a variety of options for receiving health care. These options will complement the original Medicare plan and make health care choices for Medicare beneficiaries similar to those available to younger people. Beneficiaries will receive a new publication in November explaining the options and other Medicare services.

Parking Garage, Apartment Building For Hancock Lot?

new plans would increase parking and reduce previously proposed commercial or residential use, the mayor said.

The new proposal may include some residential use and some limited commercial use, he added. "I don't see any retail use at all, not even in a small area," he said.

Dickinson said Tuesday he had been working on new plans for about a year and only recently was able to develop a conceptual layout.

"We had to wait for the concourse realignment," said Dickinson. "Phase 2 will take some of the parking area along Revere Street. We didn't know where the property lines would be, so we couldn't site a building.

"Only recently has the alignment for the concourse been determined, when and if it gets built," said Dickinson.

He is proposing constructing a small, 72-unit apartment building at the corner of Chestnut and Revere streets. There would be parking beneath the building to "take care of the building's needs...which would be complementary to the garage's use by the retail business. We would have no negative impact" on the demands for parking, he said.

"We still have a lot of work to do. There has to be certainty for the concourse, and the [building] design has to be reviewed," said Dickinson, who said he hoped he could begin the project by the end of the year.

"The primary use for the property would be more parking," said Mannarino, "and we are in the planning process. We want something that will not compete with the parking [demands] which already exists.

"We would get more parking. The merchants want more parking," he said.

An apartment building would compete less than office space," said Mannarino, "but this is the first day of discussions."

Dickinson said he was not involved in plans for building a garage. That would be done by the city, he said.

"We need funding," said Mannarino, noting that it costs about $10,000 per parking space or $2 million to add 200 spaces.

One option would be to create a site where you could build some apartments. Revenue from the apartments could be earmarked for financing the garage, he said.

"We also would open avenues of communication with the state and with Norfolk County groups which contribute to the need for parking for the court house."

Thirdly, he said, "we would look at other means to finance the project, perhaps through tax incremental financing."

He said the proposal for apartments and a garage would meet the need for both housing and more parking.

Previous proposals for office and retail space would have competed with the existing businesses downtown and with the demand for parking. "That was the opposite of what we need to do," said Mannarino.

"We're several more months in the preliminary planning stages," he continued. "Obviously, we need to sit down with the city officials, the mayor first, the city council and the neighborhood groups.

"But we know we have to do something [about the lot]. We can't have the status quo."

More Planes And Noise Over Homes Feared Runway Opposition Mounts

By MARILYN JACKSON

Local opposition is quickly mounting against the new proposed $25 million unidirectional runway at Logan International Airport which, residents claim, would increase noise over their homes in Squantum, Houghts Neck and West Quincy.

"It's deja vu," said Bernice Mader, who has been fighting against airport expansion for nearly 20 years and only last year stepped down as chairman of the community action committee after a 19-year stint. For the past eight years she has been the executive assistant to Mayor James Sheets.

Added state Rep. Bruce Ayers: "It's our duty to protect the city from any negative impacts. I want to see more public input so my constituents will have an opportunity to review the runway and how it impacts Quincy and better understand how this will affect the area."

The project, jointly proposed by the Federal Aviation Administration and Massport, calls for constructing a 5,000-foot unidirectional runway at the southernmost end of the airport which would reduce delays and allow operations during northwest winds.

Massport officials say the new runway, called 14/32 for its compass points, would alleviate air traffic noise over some sections of Boston but would increase over other sections as well as other communities, including Quincy.

The new runway also would permit more planes to depart and arrive over the water, according to the environmental impact report filed with the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) unit last week.

A meeting with Peter Blute, Massport's executive director, is tentatively scheduled in Quincy during the second or third week of April, according to Mader. She said Marie Stamos of

Harold, Raymondi Raise Questions Another Delay And Concerns For Concourse

The long-awaited Quincy Center Concourse will be delayed even longer because the Mass. Highway Department does not expect to award a contract for the first phase until May or June, Public Works Commissioner David Colton said. Bids were opened in January.

Colton and the city's consulting engineers from EarthTech outlined phase two of the multi-million-dollar project for the City Council Monday night. It is at the 25 percent completion stage.

The first phase calls for extending a new roadway from Granite Street to the Parking Way and building a bridge crossing Burgin Parkway to Quincy Center.

The preliminary design for the second phase calls for razing the American Legion Hall, three homes on Mechanic Street and a few businesses — the Tanline Tan and Travel building at 148 Parkingway and another commercial building at 1610 Hancock St. Which includes an optometrist's office, a Wing's Express and a nail salon — to extend the concourse from Parking Way to Southern Artery. City Wins Round In Point Pub Issue

The state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission has ruled that the Licensing Board was allowed to look beyond the character and fitness of an applicant in deciding whether to transfer a license from the Point Pub at 536 Washington St. to the Porter House Pub.

"This is a victory for the neighborhood," said Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi. "This is a good sign."

However, the appeal by Drogheda United Corp., doing business as The Porter House Pub, has not ended.

The ABCC plans to schedule an evidentiary hearing on whether the licensing board's reasons for denying the license fall within the scope of the ABCC's interpretation of "public interest."

Raymondi said it was not in the public interest to have a liquor license in that area.

At the time of the hearing, residents presented a petition with some 1,000 signatures opposing the license transfer. The license board then voted to cancel the all-alcoholic license for the premises because the licensee failed to conduct the licensed business.

Since the Point Pub closed in mid-1997, several changes occurred in the neighborhood, including the acquisition by St. Joseph's Church of an adjacent lot which is used for parking.

Neighbors Don't Want Drug Testing Firm

By MARILYN JACKSON

A drug testing firm, known as Secon, which moved into offices at 401 Water St. two-and-a-half weeks ago, is scouring the city for new quarters.

Its present neighbors would be delighted if it moves. So would be Quincy District Court Judge Mark Coven, who asked Secon to move for the safety not only of its clients but Secon's employees as well.

Last week, an employee who was locking up was robbed of $1,100, the receipts collected that day for the drug screenings, Coven said.

An outraged Ward 4 Councillor Michael D'Amico told the City Council that residents and business people alike are very concerned that a drug testing facility had moved into the heart of Brewers Corner. Many of Secon's clients are on probation for drug use, D'Amico said.

He complained that no city agency, including the school department, was informed of Secon's move into Brewers Corner.

"This business, which serves as an agency to screen test those on probation for drug use, is in close proximity to all Ward 4 schools, the Della Chiesa Early Childhood Center, the Sterling Middle School and the Lincoln-Hancock Community Elementary School," said D'Amico. In fact, Lincoln-Hancock is "just feet away" from the Secon office.

He added that there is no adequate parking for the City To Hire Legal Counsel To Fight Highpoint Lawsuits

Quincy will be hiring special counsel to defend the city in the anticipated lawsuits to be filed by Highpoint developer Dean Stratouly, Mayor James Sheets said this week.

"There are areas of law that will make it necessary for the city to obtain special counsel," said Sheets, but added that City Solicitor Stephen McGrath and he had not decided who that would be or what outside expertise the city would need.

Last week, an attorney for Congress Group Ventures challenged the city's failure to file a record of decision on the developer's proposal to build 1,241 apartments off Quarry Street.

The City Council, acting as the special permit granting authority for a Planned Unit Development, had voted against that proposal March 2 as well another proposal for 1,195 units as favored by the conservation commission but had not filed its decision by March 8, 65 days after Stratouly's representatives presented the $200 million proposal.

As part of Congress Group Ventures' proposal, the developer had planned to clean up the former quarry site, once used as a landfill, at an estimated cost of $3.5 million.

Now the developer claims that the city would be liable for the cleanup. "We may need to get a strong environmental lawyer to address the 21E issues," said the mayor.

Asked how much it money has the city set aside to fight whatever lawsuits Congress Group Ventures files, Sheets said, "In terms of money, we'll spend whatever it costs.

Asked whether a door remained open to negotiate an agreement between the city and the developer, Sheets said he could not comment, due to the fact that lawsuits are imminent.

However, City Council President Peter Kolson said earlier this month that it was clearly possible that another proposal would be presented to the council as a special permit granting authority.

Congress Group Ventures acquired the 75 acres of vacant land in October 1997 for $8.5 million. Last June, it filed its application to build 1,641 units in 27 buildings; one of the buildings would house 250 assisted living residences.

Since then, the project had been scaled back, resulting in 1,241 units.

The size of the project and the feared impact on the area were the main reasons for the councillors' voting against Highpoint, which would have been one of the largest residential complexes on the South Shore.

In addition to the landfill cleanup, the developer had proposed installing new water mains, improving the existing drainage system, and installing traffic signals at several intersections and paving 15 streets. The developer also agreed to provide a significant amount of open space.

The project promised to generate more than 1,400 jobs for local contractors and ultimately provide about $1.4 million in new tax revenue annually when the development was completed.

At the last hour, behind-the-scenes negotiations focused on paring the development down to 790 units and offering favorable tax concessions in exchange for 35 acres of open space. Originally, the developer had earmarked three acres for open space.

Tom McKay, president of the Quincy and South Shore building Trades Construction Council estimated the city could face a $500,000 legal bill plus a $6 million bill to clean up the old landfill.

City Ready For 2000 And Y2K

The City of Quincy is prepared for the year 2000, Chuck Phelan, head of data processing, told city councilors Monday night.

"There's a lot of scared people out there and a lot of misinformation," Phelan said. "We have to calm people's fears."

Phelan unveiled new links on the city's web page on the .Internet — www.ci.quincy.ma.us — which he said are available now.

For example, if someone wanted to find out what has Mass. Electric or Boston Gas or Bell Atlantic has done to meet Y2K changes, a browser could go to the city's website and link to the specific utility.

Nearly all of the city's departments are Y2K compliant, said Phelan who added he expects everything to be completed by the end of June. Most were completed as of Dec. 31, 1998, he said.

The school department's vehicles and equipment and some of the data processing personal computers need renovations to be compliant, he added. A computer program in the fire department and one of the networks in the data processing department will be updated in the coming months as well.

"If Y2K occurred tomorrow, we could conduct city services," Phelan said. He said he already has done a test for the payroll to be sure that checks to the city's 3,000 employees will be issued appropriately when Jan. 1, 2000, comes.

He said the computer system has a gas-powered generator to back up any possible electrical failure and a battery

No Place Like Home

Bill Morrill feels the same way Dorothy did after her visit to the Land of Oz.

There's no place like home.

Bill, you'll remember, set out last fall as Quincy's "ambassador of goodwill" on a trip to the other Quincys in the country.

Morrill, who owns Creative Fairs, a special events firm, left here in October and covered 12,000 miles in 27 days in his 1994 Ford club wagon visiting 16 other Quincys.

Now working on a video documentary of the trip with Quincy Access Television, he says:

"We by far have the best Quincy of all. It's the cleanest, safest one I came across. We also offer our residents much more in all areas."

Morrill took a TV camera and a still camera along with him and shot scenes of all the Quincys and interviewed residents in each. He liked the people he met.

The TV footage will be part of a millennium celebration documentary being put together by Bette Campbell, executive director, and her staff at Quincy Access TV.

The still photos will appear soon in The Quincy Sun. On his tour, Morrill brought greetings from Mayor James Sheets, literature on Quincy's historic sites including The Sun's Historic Quincy supplement and such mementos as "Cleaner, Greener Quincy" T-shirts.

The latter obviously made a big hit and impression in Quincy, Ky. They are going to hold their first Cleaner, Greener Quincy campaign this month.

The Cleaner, Greener Day is being organized by Justin Jackson, the postmaster in Quincy, Ky.

He also liked the literature on Quincy's First Night so much that he plans to come here for the First Night Celebration 2000.

The two became good friends during Morrill's visit. And just the other day discovered it really is a small world.

Jackson wrote to Morrill and told him he pulled into a gas station on his way home from work and a woman got out of the car in front of him that was from Massachusetts.

"I asked her if she knew where Quincy, Mass. was and she said, 'I sure do! I showed her your name and address and she said she knew your wife."

"She then yelled to her mother in the car and she confirmed that they indeed did know a Mrs. Bill Morrill. I was so excited I forgot to ask their names."

Bill and his wife, Ann, are still wondering who they might be

And after looking them all over, Morrill says: "I'll take our Quincy."

"You hear what a great job the mayor and the city council does. I certainly agree. I also feel all the employees in the city should be commended for all they do for us every day of the year."

"We are also fortunate to have many business people in the city who give much back to the community."

"Quincy, Mass. is a wonderful place to live and work. It's a beautiful, productive and historic city." He wouldn't swap it for all the tea in China or all the other Quincys in the world.

LINDA TRACY, who moved to Hyannis shortly after losing to Ward 3 Councillor Pat McDermott two years ago, says she may be coming back for another try.

"I'm thinking of moving back to Quincy," she said in a call from the Cape. "Ward 3 to be exact."

Apparently all she would have to do to qualify as a candidate in this year's election is to move back, register to vote, take out nomination papers when they become available May 3 and return them by the July 27 deadline.

Council trivia we reported that Joseph LaRaia served the longest in the council with 20 years and five months.

Councillor and former Mayor Frank McCauley, who came up with the trivia items, says he was referring to the longest service among the 28 councillors attending the recent council reunion.

Actually, the all-time champ, he says, was the late John Quinn who served 24 years and was known as "the Dean."

FORMER QUINCY POLICE Detective Charlie Griffin moved to Sandwich shortly after retiring in 1972. And although it has been 27 years now, he is still very much interested in what's going on in Quincy and keeps up to date via a mail subscription to The Sun.

Griffin has deep Quincy roots. His father, Thomas, was Ward 2 city councillor in the 1920s and lived all his life in a house on Edison St.

Charlie wasn't interested in a political career but his nephew, Jeff Griffin, was and is. Jeff, formerly of Dorchester, is now mayor of Reno.

Charlie and Jim Fay made a dynamic detective duo in the Quincy police department and didn't mind putting in a lot of their own time tracking down case leads.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS AN EARLY 1930'S POSTCARD view of the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy Point. In the center distance can be seen the old Quincy Point Bridge that preceded the present structure built in 1934. To its left in the far distance can be seen the smokestack of the old Eastern Mass. Street Railway power plant. In the

Respect Our Teachers

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

The advertisement placed by the Quincy Education Association in the issue of March 4 brings to the forefront the situation of Quincy teachers, who have been working without a contract for many months.

As a parent of a student at the Lincoln-Hancock Community School, I feel admiration and gratitude for the fine teachers who have furthered my son's education and nurtured his character development. It troubles me that the question of their proper compensation for work done well and unselfishly should go so long unresolved.

Knowing that the salary they are given is a means of expressing appreciation for work done, should we be content to convey to them, and to the South Shore community at large, that Quincy values its teachers less than do surrounding towns? Can we honestly expect that the best teachers will choose to establish their careers in a city that pays significantly less than surrounding communities? Can we honestly expect that the standard of education can be maintained in the coming years if we, as a city, are unwilling to encourage the best teachers to come to Quincy by offering them a wage they deserve? Can we expect to attract young men, who look forward to raising families of their own, to a profession that needs them, if they are unable to command a salary that allows them to meet the commitments of home and family.

The teachers of our community are entrusted with our most valuable resource—our children. If we expect to have the fine services of our teachers, who are working with our children, our investment in the future, we will need to show our appreciation by compensating them fairly.

I urge the chairman of the school committee, Mayor James Sheets, and his fellow members on the school committee, to treat our teachers, our most valuable resource in the educational community, with respect. Raise their salaries to a level that is competitive with neighboring cities and give tangible proof that we value our educators, and that will ultimately strengthen our city in the years to come.

A Tribute To Jim Higgins

Editor, The Quincy Sun,

On Feb. 28, Jim Higgins a legendary Quincy Youth Baseball coach, died of cancer at the Carney Hospital at the age of 61.

Jim was an exceptional Babe Ruth coach, loved by his players and their parents. Jim was a student of the game. In his Dorchester days, he had been a fine pitcher. He was a three-sport star at Cathedral High School, where he was a pitcher in baseball, a guard in basketball, and a quarterback in football. He graduated, with high honors, from Holy Cross in Worcester. Upon graduating, he worked as an accountant for General Electric. Not happy in the corporate world, he took a job teaching accounting and business in the Boston School System. He retired at age 59, after a 30 year career.

The young man lucky enough to be one of Jim's players hit the jackpot. Jim knew the game, he knew how to teach youngsters, and he cared a great deal about kids. Jim never married. His players and I suspect that some of his students were his extended family. His teaching schedule left him ample time to practice. His teams were a fixture at O'Rourke Playground in West Quincy. Jim, unknowingly, kept up a long tradition of sending great players out of O'Rourke playground.

Every year, he would select (draft) five new 13-year-old players for his team. He was partial to kids from Germantown. He thought they were mentally tougher and would respond to him. He would also draft players from the Triple AAA League, whose skills were underdeveloped when he got them. When they left Jim's team three years later, their skills were up to their age level. Jim was a father figure to many a boy whose real father was absent.

Jim loved practicing more than the games. He loved to joke with his players. He would rattle off a Latin quote, watch their puzzled faces and then explain it to them. If necessary, he helped his players with their homework and always encouraged them to do their best in school.

His fellow coaches relied on Jimmy to explain the Babe Ruth League rules. They knew he was a wealth of knowledge on any aspect of baseball. He would spend all the time necessary to help a fellow coach.

Jim was a very private person, so only his immediate family was aware of his serious health problems. He died two months after his cancer was diagnosed. When his former players found out about his condition, they sent him cards and notes telling him how much he meant to them. Jim's sister, Judy, read the cards to him when he was too weak to do it himself. He was lucid enough to understand that many were thinking about him.

Former players and their parents attended Jim's wake to console his family and to personally tell him what he had meant to them. One of those players quietly left a Bryan Post hat (Jim's team) with a message of thanks in the casket. Jim was buried with that hat.

The Quincy baseball scene has lost a legendary coach, but I'm comforted by knowing that they have one hell of a first base coach in heaven.

Tom Mullaney
115 Standish Ave.
PS: Jim would only read The Quincy Sun. For years he would send in write-ups of his games that were published in The Sun. He always wrote only positive statements about his players and the opposing team. He tried very hard to get as many players' names as possible in each article.

Herter Signs 3 Quincy Bills

By PAUL HAROLD

Gov. Christian Herter signed three bills sponsored by the city's legislative delegation and the mayor.

The first bill, allowing Quincy to purchase Squaw Rock in Squantum from the City of Boston, was co-sponsored by Mayor David McIntosh and Boston Mayor John Hynes.

The second bill provided for a change in the election of school committee members. Instead of electing all members in the same election, a staggering of terms was provided to enable more continuity in programs.

The final bill authorized the school committee to sell programs and refreshments at Veterans Memorial Stadium, formerly known as the Quincy Stadium.

TAXPAYERS' GROUP URGES CAUTION IN SPENDING

At its monthly meeting at Ship's Haven Restaurant, the Quincy Taxpayers Association (QTA) urged that the city "stop, look and listen" before it proceeded to construct a new wing at Quincy City Hospital.

"The present bonded indebtedness of $8 million necessitates a policy of caution before going ahead with large capital projects," Vice President Robert Zildjian said.

The QTA also went on record favoring temporary, demountable steel buildings to ease the school overcrowding, rather than permanent additions. They reiterated their stand against rent control at both the state and local level.

HEALTH DEPT. TO INSPECT NURSING HOMES

In an effort to supplement this inspections by the state, health commissioner Dr. Brooks Ryder said his department would inspect the city's 14 nursing and boarding homes for the aged, every two months. In the past, the inspections took place annually, as part of re-certification.

Health agents and inspectors Clarence Edwards and Howard Porter would head up the work, along with nutritionist Marjorie Foster, who would advise the home operators on good nutrition.

Egg Plant, Rigatoni Bake

Our daughter Sue and son-in-law Anthony were coming for dinner that recent snowy night. While their little darlings were outside on their sleds, I was preparing dinner.

I planned egg plant parmesan with rigatoni on the side. But instead I combined the two and baked them together in a casserole. It got raves!

Egg Plant, Rigatoni Bake

1 medium egg plant
1/2 pound rigatoni
3 or 4 cups tomato sauce grated romano cheese 1/2 pound shredded cheddar bread crumbs for coating
1 egg mixed with milk for coating.
2 or 3 tablespoons vegetable oil for cookie sheets

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. I didn't peel the egg plant, but you may do so if you wish. Slice egg plant about a quarter inch thick. Place egg plant in the egg mixture first, then the bread crumbs. On a greased cookie sheet or two, place the breaded egg plant and bake for about 15 minutes. I don't usually turn them, but you can if you want.

While these are baking, cook the rigatoni according to directions. Add sauce and grated cheese.

When the egg plant is done, grease the bottom of a casserole baking dish. Place some sauce first on the bottom, then layer the egg plant with sauce and cheeses, then the rigatoni and cheese, then the egg plant until they are done. Top it with more sauce and grated cheese and bake covered 350 degree oven until done about 45 minutes.

Correction: In a recipe for sweet and sour chicken written March 4, my cousin Marian called to say I left out the amount of pickles. And a few more calls came into the office. Here is the revised recipe.

1/2 to 1 pound chicken tenders corn flake crumbs for coating (or bread crumbs)

1 egg mixed with milk

Coat the chicken first in the egg mixture and the crumbs. Saute chicken in hot oil until golden brown. Drain and set aside.

Sweet and Sour Sauce

1 small can pineapple squares

1/2 cup sugar

1/4 to 1/2 cups sweet mixed pickles

3 tablespoons corn starch

3/4 cups cider vinegar

1 tablespoon soy sauce

1/4 teaspoon ginger

Combine sugar, corn starch, soy sauce, juice from the pineapple, vinegar and ginger and boil for two minutes.

Add the pickles and pineapple. Then add the chicken and blend. Delicious served over rice.

Dana Smith, D.P.M. and George J. Ducach, D.P.M. Surgeons-Podiatrists MISMATCHING FEET Some people experience pain along the inside of the ankle and along the arch of the foot. It usually appears in the fifth through seventh decade of life. The pain usually begins without a history of trauma and the curious finding is that the foot begins to look considerably flatter than the other, resulting in mismatched feet. This condition could be due to severe inflammation of the Posterior Tibial tendon or even a rupture of the tendon. The pain can be relieved by conservative care such as anti-inflammatory medications, physical therapy, orthotics and even braces. In severe cases it may require surgical correction. If you have experienced pain such as what has been described above, consider a thorough evaluation by a qualified podiatrist. If you are suffering from these or any other foot related complaints, call us at 773-4300. Clinical Voice Station Installed At Quincy Hospital

Quincy Hospital announces the installation of the Clinical Voice Station, a medical documentation speech recognition device for use by Emergency Department physicians and Physician Assistants (PAs). Quincy is one of the first hospitals on the South Shore to utilize speech recognition equipment.

The Clinical Voice Station is a medical documentation device that combines the specialized medical knowledge bases and speech recognition technology developed by Lernout and Hauspie with the clinical workstation transcription system developed by national electronic transcription company MedQuist.

Physicians and PAs utilize the new equipment by dictating information into the Clinical Voice Station, which immediately creates a report. The new device has the potential of greatly reducing report turnaround time, thereby benefiting patients in the Quincy Hospital Emergency Department. With the technology, patients can now be transferred to the patient floors with an immediate chart from the ED.

"Quincy Hospital is always looking for new ways to improve patient care and we believe we've found another way to do just that by installing the new speech recognition equipment in our Emergency Department," said Octavio Diaz, MD, chief of Emergency Services. "By freeing up some of the time we spend on transcription, we are now able to spend more time with our patients."

ENC Pre-Law Students Meet Independent Counsel Starr

Five pre-law students from Eastern Nazarene College recently traveled with Pre-Law Program Director Dr. Donald Yerxa to Washington, D.C. for an intensive five-day seminar taught by Atty. Michael J. Woodruff, ENC's general counsel and principal of the northern Virginia law firm of Gammon & Grange, P.C.

The highlight of the travel seminar was the 90-minute session the students had with Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr, who shared his faith and outlook on the law with ENC students Tricia Lightcap, Benn Lofton, Joy McNally, Scot Patriquin and Phil Rotz.

Observing the law from the perspectives of the three branches of the federal government, the students were the guests of Justice Stephen

J. Breyer to hear two oral arguments at the U.S. Supreme Court.

Students also spent a day at the Prince William County (Virginia) District Court with Judge Lon Farris. After observing the proceedings in Farris's courtroom the students met with the judge in his private chambers to discuss the workings of the court. Farris is an ENC trustee and member of ENC's Pre-Law Advisory Council.

During their trip, students also met with Robert Zachritz, legislative aide of Democratic Congressman Tony Hall of Ohio and Hon. Philip C. Wilcox, Jr., ambassador-at-large for Counter-Terrorism.

Within this seminar students were able to observe and experience the law profession at multiple levels. Students had a chance to meet with various partners and associates of the Gammon & Grange firm to discuss aspects of the law and different areas of specialization.

Delahunt Announces Seniors Washington Internship Program

Congressman William Delahunt, co-chair of the House Older Americans Caucus, invites area senior citizens to apply for a unique educational program this spring in Washington.

The Close-Up Foundation, a non-profit civic education group, is sponsoring the 1999 Congressional Senior Intern Program in Washington from May 15 to 22. The program offers a series of seminars, workshops and on-site study visits designed to expose participants to the people and processes that develop national policy.

Delahunt, in addition to sponsoring Southeastern Massachusetts participants, will join Congressman Ralph Regula (R-OH) in co-hosting the National Congressional Senior Intern Program. The two house colleagues co-chair the Older American Caucus, which oversees the intern program.

To apply for an internship, seniors are asked to provide information on their background, as well as a short statement on why they would like to represent the 20th Congressional District in Washington. These can be typed or handwritten-faxed, mailed, e-mailed, or dropped off at Delahunt's nearest office by March 26.

Congressional Senior Interns must be at least 60 years of age and in good health. Applications are encouraged from seniors who are actively involved in their communities and willing to share the knowledge gained through this experience when they return home.

"This program offers older Americans a practical, behind-the-scenes look at how the efforts of individuals can affect public policy that touches all of us," Delahunt said. Activities include discussions with members of Congress, Administration and diplomatic officials, journalists, and policy experts—as well as visits to many sites of historical and cultural significance. Tenth District Senior interns will also spend part of their time in Delahunt's Congressional office on Capitol Hill.

While lauding the program, Delahunt warned that the substantial cost of participating in the program falls on the participant. The program fee is $1000, which includes seven nights lodging (double occupancy) in a area hotel, most meals, and all program activities. Single rooms can be requested for an additional $355. The fee does not include transportation to and from Washington. Congressional offices are not permitted to underwrite these expenses, nor may they participate in any fundraising activities to cover them.

In addition to lodging, the fee covers: seminars and workshops; an evening at the theatre, the guidance of professional Close-up staff; escorted visits to area monuments and museums; all taxes, tips, and gratuities; baggage handling at the hotel; health and accident insurance; and transportation to and from all scheduled activities.

Seniors may call Delahunt's office toll free at 1-800-749-9911 (South Shore) for more details.

'Body Recall' For Seniors March 31

The Quincy Department of Elder Services is sponsoring a demonstration on "Body Recall".

This is a movement program that is particularly beneficial for the health of older people. The Body Recall Program is designed to help people whose bodies have been slowed down because of inactivity or injury, regain or "recall" their lost function. Body Recall is based on the principals that bodies need to be active, that slow movement is possible for everyone and that people can become physically fit by moving slowly.

The demonstration will take place at the Squantum Gardens Community Center from 10:30a.m.-11:30a.m. For more information or to make a reservation, call Mary Burke at 376-1243.

Business, Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design

Crime Prevention through Environmental Design (CPTED) is based on the premise that you can alter the physical environment to make a business less attractive to criminals and to reduce the fear of crime. Take a look at your business's physical environment with these three basic principles of CPTED in mind.

TERRITORIALITY

People protect territory that they feel is their own and usually respect the territory of others. Fences, pavement treatments, art, signs, good maintenance, and landscaping are some physical ways to express ownership. Identifying intruders is much easier in a well-defined space.

NATURAL SURVEILLANCE

Criminals don't want to be seen. Placing physical features, activities, and people in ways that maximize the ability to see what's going on discourages crime. Shadows, or such barriers as bushes or window advertisements, make it difficult to observe activity. Landscaping and lighting can be planned to promote natural surveillance from inside a building and from the outside by people passing by. Giving such "gatekeepers" as parking lot attendants and hotel desk clerks an unrestricted view of their territory is important.

ACCESS CONTROL

Properly located entrances, exits, fencing, landscaping and lighting can direct both foot and automobile traffic in ways that discourage crime. Criminals want to get in and out in a hurry, and barriers can impede their progress. Access control can be as simple as a front office with one door that serves as both entry and exit. Other strategies include closing streets to through traffic or controlled to parking lots.

Paul Cremin Visits New Bedford Whaling Museum

Paul E. Cremin, a sophomore at Boston College High School, recently visited the New Bedford Whaling Museum as part of a research project for students in an American literature honors class, who have read Moby Dick.

Cremin was one of 74 honors students who were required to do a research project on some aspect of the story.

The students toured the museum's extensive collection of whaling artifacts, paintings, exhibits, and other memorabilia, including a half-scale model of a whaling ship, the Lagoda.

They also visited the historic seamen's bethel across the street from the museum. This small chapel was frequented by Melville and other sailors during his New Bedford days and also figures prominently in Moby Dick.

Making Mass. State Police History

A STATE POLICE FIRST -- Kathleen Coletta Stefani, who grew up in Quincy, made Massachusetts State Police history recently when she was promoted to captain, the first woman to hold that rank. Stefani, now a Plymouth resident, is shown in photo at right, when she graduated at age 22 from the State Police Academy in Framingham in 1978. Pinning her badge on her is her father, Gerard Coletta, who was then chief executive assistant to Norfolk County Dist. Atty. William Delahunt's office and now lives in Sandwich. In top left photo, Kathleen's husband, retired State Police Captain Michael Stefani, pins his badge on her. With new Captain Stefani in top right photo are Undersecretary of Public Safety Robert Hayden; Secretary of Public Safety Jane Perlov, and Colonel Reed Hillman, Superintendent of the State Police. The new captain is now assigned to the latter's office in Framingham. Her brother, Gerard "Chip" Coletta, III is a state police sergeant and on the eligibility list for promotion to lieutenant.

Foot Notes

by Dr. Richard A. Hacker
Surgeon-Podiatrist

TREATMENT FOR FOOT ULCERS

A foot ulcer can occur with any break in the skin. Ulcers on the feet pose a special challenge for several reasons. They usually occur, in part, from poor circulation. This can make healing more difficult. Also, loss of normal skin sensations, can make some people unaware of the problem till it has reached severe stages.

Treatments include bandaging the wound and usually requires antibiotics and rest. Foot supports and padding may be prescribed to redistribute weight. Care usually takes a lot of teamwork and time when more severe ulcers occur.

Any ulcer on the feet or legs should be taken seriously, especially for people with diabetes or poor circulation. Failure to bring the damage under control can lead to gangrene (tissue death) and osteomyelitis (bone infection). This can result in unnecessary amputation.

Many foot problems can threaten your health and well being. Regardless of your age or health, you owe it to yourself to get the care you need. If you have noticed a foot problem starting, call (617) 472-3466. Dr. Hacker's office is at 110 W. Squantum Street in North Quincy.

P.S. A daily self-examination of the feet can insure that problems will be spotted early... especially important for diabetics and the elderly.

REAL ESTATE

Hang On To Those Closing Day Papers

Once you find the perfect new house for you family and make an offer that the sellers accept, you'll enter the closing portion of the deal.

Then, on closing day, you'll need to pay various closing costs and you'll sign your name to a variety of important papers that you should always keep in your personal files.

One of the papers you'll sign is the settlement form. Among other things, it may detail the real estate taxes you will pay as well as any points you may have purchased to buy down your mortgage.

This form will come in handy when it's time to file your tax return for the year in which you bought your house, as both taxes and points are tax deductible.

While you won't need to sign anything concerning your new homeowners insurance on closing day, you will need to show proof of it. And just like all other insurance policies, keep a copy of your homeowner's policy in a secure place. In fact, it's beneficial to keep all of your closing documents and insurance papers in your bank safety deposit box. Also, keep copies of your originals in a safe place at home, such as a fire-proof safe.

relieve their symptoms correctly, instead of masking them," said Jeff McLean, Vice President of Lens Care Marketing for Bausch & Lomb, which sponsored the survey.

To help consumers correctly use eye care treatments available over-the-counter, Bausch & Lomb offers the following eye care tips:

- Eyes irritated by allergies require an antihistamine to relieve itching. Causes:

seasonal or chronic reaction to allergens such as pollen, dust, animal hair or ragweed.

- Dry eyes require a formula that moisturizes and replenishes natural tears, relieves discomfort and protects against further irritation. Causes: aging, menopause, dry environment, computer use, some medications.

- General eye irritation requires a sterile solution to flush the eyes as needed. Causes: chlorine or foreign objects such as dirt, dust, or stray eyelashes.

Preventing Osteoarthritis

(NAPS)—Playing sports safely today may help prevent you from developing osteoarthritis in the future, according to the Arthritis Foundation.

That's because injuries resulting from exercise can lead to osteoarthritis within one and three decades. The riskiest sports are basketball, baseball, softball, skiing, in-line skating, volleyball and weight lifting.

That's no reason to give up the health benefits of exercise—which include boosting energy, lowering blood pressure and improving blood circulation. To help prevent injuries, here are a few tips from the Arthritis Foundation:

- Choose a sport that's right for you. If it doesn't feel right, try something else.
- Use the right equipment and protective gear. Customize to take care of physical misalignments.

- Cross train. Mixing activities can reduce the risk of repetitive stress problems.

- Listen to your body. If something hurts, don't push through the pain.

- Take care of injuries and follow up on rehabilitation recommendations.

- Strengthen the muscles surrounding a joint to protect it from further damage.

Call the Arthritis Foundation for free information at 1-800-283-7800.

Sports injuries can result in the development of osteoarthritis, so it pays to exercise safely and with the right equipment.

Sterling Students Learn About Winning At School From U.S. Olympic Lugers

Erin Warren and Matt McClain, members of the 1999 USA Luge Team, encouraged local students to "Win at School" during a recent visit to the Sterling Middle School.

Warren, a member of the 1994 and 1998 Olympic USA Luge Teams, and McClain, a 1998 Olympic alternate and unprecedented four-time World Junior Champion, discussed the benefits of hard work, dedication and setting goals with sixth, seventh and eighth graders at Sterling. They also demonstrated luge equipment, showed an action-packed luge video and highlighted the USA Luge Team's recent achievements—including its first Olympic medal performances and top finishes in 1998-99 World Cup competition.

"I use my own experiences to let students know how the choices they make today help shape their futures," said Warren. "Being the best -- in sports, in school or in life -- takes more than natural ability. It demands commitment and the willingness to accept challenges and sacrifices others might avoid."

Now in its seventh year, the Bell Atlantic Win at School Program brings Warren and McClain into 30 middle and junior high schools from Maine to Washington, D.C., and reaches thousands of students.

Warren, 27, of Somerville, has been involved with Bell Atlantic Win At School program since its inception in 1993. In 1998, she finished sixth in the Winter Olympic Games -- tops among U.S. women in Nagano -- and was named the USA Luge Female Athlete of the Year by team staff and athletes. During the 1998-99 season, she has consistently led the U.S. women's luge team in World Cup competition.

McClain, in his second year with the program, is a Lake Placid, N.Y. resident. He and doubles partner Christian Niccum finished fifth overall in the 1998-99 World Cup season with two gold medals.

The Bell Atlantic Win at School program has two additional components to reinforce assembly messages. Bell Atlantic, USA Luge's founding sponsor, distributes a Win At School resource guide to educators with suggested activities to enhance student awareness, develop problem-solving skills, and promote critical thinking.

Last winter, Team USA made history when the doubles teams of Chris Thorpe and Gordy Sheer, and Mark Grimmette and Brian Martin, captured the silver and bronze medals, respectively -- the country's first Olympic medals in luge.

Council Honors Pee Wee A's State Champs

The Quincy Youth Hockey Pee Wee A team was honored Monday night by the City Council in recognition of their capturing the state title.

"It's not often that Quincy has a state championship," said Councillor Timothy Cahill, who went to high school with one of the coaches.

"I'm not much of a skater, but I do know how much commitment is needed to make a successful hockey player.

"I am very proud of this team, and Quincy should be proud of this team. They are truly a credit to this city."

The youth hockey program is a wonderful program, Cahill continued. Children from every ward are represented. They not only learn how to play hockey but they learn strong values to grow up to be good men and women.

This year, both North Quincy and Quincy qualified for hockey tournaments, Cahill continued. That's due to the Quincy Youth Hockey program, which is a great breeding ground.

"By reason of the program's success, many other players go on to play at Boston College High, Archbishop Williams and Catholic Memorial. It's probably the strongest program in eastern Massachusetts," Cahill said.

The Quincy Youth Hockey Pee Wee A team were state champions after emerging victoriously from a strong field of 16 teams representing 10 district champions from across Massachusetts.

The team hustled, scrambled and banged their way to the top during a grueling schedule of five games in three days. Coach Al Grazioso and assistants Mark Giordani and Steve McGowan said the trophy was especially meaningful because it was the result of a complete team effort in which every player contributed at some crucial point in the tournament.

In the second period, goalie Nick Manning was outstanding as he fended off repeated rushes from the opposition. Matt Germain scored an unassisted goal and Matt Lavery added to the Quincy lead when he buried a pass from Matt Grazioso on a breakout started in the Quincy end by Timmy Duggan. Hard hitting and hustle by defensemen Jake O'Donnell and Steve Kelley limited the Starhawks to one goal in this period.

Third period action started with a Starhawk goal which was quickly answered with a goal by Matt Grazioso on an assist by Matt Lavery. With less than eight minutes to play Quincy was ahead 6-3 but the tough weekend schedule was beginning to take its toll. Defenders Ryan Feldhoff and Kyle Carmody dug deep to repel multiple early in the third period to tie the game at 2-2. With four minutes left in the final period, Patrick Maxey muscled the puck across the goal mouth and Liam Powers slammed the rebound home to give Quincy a 3-2 win and a trip to the finals.

The preliminary rounds of the tournament matched Quincy against Cambridge, Martha's Vineyard and SMS, a combined team from Sudbury, Maynard and Stowe. Quincy outscored the opposition 16-4 in the early games which started when they defeated Cambridge in the opening game, 5-1. The defense got offensive as Tim Duggan and Andrew Patten each scored a goal and had an assist. Steve Kelley also scored a goal.

Jack O'Donnell and Ryan Feldhoff each earned an assist and played great defensively. Brendon Conley scored by finishing an end-to-end passing play from Matt Germain and Kevin Richardson. Ryan Conley had an assist as did Matt Lavery and Matt Grazioso. Liam Powers' break away speed and constant hustle netted him a goal.

Nick Manning let in only one goal while turning away repeated Cambridge attacks.

The Quincy offense exploded in the next game against Martha's Vineyard with a convincing 7-1 victory. Quincy took the lead in the first shift when Andrew Patten scored off assists from Brendon Conley and Patrick Maxey. Brendon Conley and Patten later found Maxey in the slot and he scored too. Kevin Richardson scored two goals and had an assist. Matt Germain scored and had two assists while Matt Grazioso scored two goals. Josh Giordani and Ryan Feldhoff each had an assist. The scoring was made possible as defenders Duggan, O'Donnell, Kelley and Carmody kept the puck in the Vineyarders' end.

SCOTT DEWARE

A Thought For The Week

One of the most disconcerting things which plagues in any field must face is ridicule. And the person with a new idea which is contrary to established patterns of thought must have the courage to face the laughter of the wise ones and to proceed in spite of it. It has been said that ridicule is that form of rebuff in which men generally resort when they run out of ideas. . . . Is not ridicule often a sort of defense mechanism against arguments too hot to handle?

Granted, some things are well turned off with a laugh. Many a quarrel could have been stopped in the beginning if someone had had grace enough to crack a joke. Ridicule and laughter have their place in the solution of problems, but it is tragic when ridicule is substitute for reason in such situations.

People through the ages have ridiculed many a person and many an idea. Secretaries, Columbus, early automobile entrepreneurs, Scientists, Wright brothers are but a few. And how about the earth is round theory?

The courage to be laughed at by those who are supposed to know better is the courage that leads to success in any pioneering venture.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Some advice you receive is token and not sincere. Though it's unclear sailing for you regarding career interests, you may wish that a friend doesn't involve you with his or her peevish.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) There's a certain amount of role playing that's going on in business at present. Don't stew and fret, but talk things over with a good friend. Be expressive rather than withdrawn.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A friend seems unnecessarily difficult this week. Don't be so self-preoccupied that you fail to pay attention to what a family member is trying to tell you. Listen.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) There may be a lot of this-and-that you're upset about early in the week, but once you clear the air with a heart-to-heart talk, all is well. Be straightforward and don't let things fester.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You could be getting in your own way as the week begins. You seem stymied by one certain project, yet another door opens which puts you on the road to progress and success.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You may feel someone is being a bit manipulative at work. Though you're in harmony and on the same wave length with a partner, a relative may not seem to understand you this weekend.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A pleasure outing may prove disappointing, but you're quite comfortable at home right now. It's best at present to devote time to the family rather than outside interests.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A relative brings up something from the past. You're still in a pleasure-seeking mood and won't have much enthusiasm for anything that smacks of work right now.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) You may not drum up much enthusiasm from a partner, but there's a friend who is ready and willing to listen. You're on the right track regarding career interests.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Already, you're starting to worry about future bills. A project at work seems somewhat involved and complicated. Rapport with friends and loved ones is great during the weekend!

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) You'll probably wish that a particular person did not try to give you advice this week. Undercurrents may affect a relationship with a close tie. Mental interests are favored over the weekend.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) You may become aware of some wheeling and dealing going on behind the scenes. The prospect of going back to work after a vacation may not exactly thrill you. Non-material interests bring joy.

Runway Opposition Mounts Here

Quantum is rallying residents and hopes that representatives from each ward will attend.

Mader said she would be attending a forum this weekend at Bunker Hill Community College, chaired by U.S. Rep. Michael Capuano of Somerville who is organizing against it.

"I was figuring out this morning exactly how many would be affected by some of these [airport] changes," said Mader. "It's about 1.7 million."

"It's not as small a number as the Globe would have us portrayed as a small group of dissidents. We are 50 or so delegates who represent all of these people."

Massport's expansion plans were first unveiled in August 1995, calling for new terminals, new parking, a new Customs and baggage handling area and a "people-mover." Those groundside projects, except for the "people-mover," have been completed.

Now Massport is seeking to implement its airside projects — building a 5,000-foot-long third runway and improving the 9,000-foot-long centerfield taxiway and other taxiways.

The proposed runway would alleviate the arrival and departure delay problem at Logan, according to Betty Desrosiers, director of aviation planning and development.

But Mader challenges Massport's numbers, citing the fact that Massport records all delays together, whether a delay is attributed to a backup of planes awaiting takeoff or landing or blamed on the weather.

"On a day like today, Logan is experiencing significant delays," said Mader. "They have nothing to do with the runway combinations. Some airlines did not want to land and be unable to get out."

She pointed out that even with 110,000 hours of delay experienced by airlines, that number represents just 3 percent of the air traffic.

Last week, several legislators and their aides met with state Rep. Robert DeLeo of Winthrop and Rep. Eugene O'Flaherty of Charlestown who have filed several bills in opposition to the airport expansion. DeLeo had filed similar bills previously.

One of the bills, H1676, would prohibit Massport from building runway 14/32, while another, H1678, would prohibit construction of a proposed centerfield taxiway.

A third bill would create a 13-member commission to investigate the potential expansion of regional airports, such as New Bedford, Worcester and Hanscom Field, which is owned by Massport, "to achieve maximum utilization" of the facilities.

"We're late getting out of the box" to oppose the new runway, DeLeo told the group. A hearing on the bills is scheduled at 10 a.m. March 23 at the Statehouse before the Joint Committee on Transportation.

"We are of the opinion that an additional runway will divert smaller aircraft and provide an opportunity for larger aircraft on other runways which, in turn, will generate more flights and more overhead noise," said DeLeo. "In five years, we will need another runway," he predicted.

"They are spending $25 to $30 million for a temporary, short-sighted solution," Mader continued. "They have not shown a vision of thinking; they do not do long-term planning," she charged.

"They don't show any talent or indication of interest in wanting to pursue a long-range planning function," she continued.

Massport paid little attention to alternatives, such as commuter rail and the high-speed Boston-to-New York train, she said, nor did Massport look at the state's other airports, particularly Hanscom Field, which Massport owns, and Worcester Airport.

Although Massport proposes to use the portion of runway 14/32 which juts out into Boston Harbor and not the end which points to the South Shore, neither Massport nor FAA officials would commit in writing that if this runway is built it would not be used in any other direction.

"I have asked specifically half a dozen times," said Mader, "but have not been able to get an affirmative answer."

"I might be slightly skeptical," she continued. "In order to build this runway, Massport would have to break a legal promise to East Boston and Winthrop that it would never build this runway. Massport presently is trying to have the court injunction lifted," she said.

"If you were to try to locate a modern American airport on the current space, you would never be allowed to do it," said Mader. "Logan is less than 28 percent of the size required by general aviation standards. Just look at Denver, Dallas-Fort Worth, even Manchester, N.H."

"They have thousands of acres; Logan has only 30-something acres. It's a postage stamp by comparison. Trying to stick another runway there is not feasible. It doesn't work," she said.

"We have several concerns for our South Shore communities," she continued. "If the runway is built and planes take off over the ocean, they will be turning right and left, right along the shore, depending on their ultimate destination. But Massport won't tell us what are the standard instrument directions."

"Just because these planes are smaller, does not mean they are quiet. When the FAA ordered all old aircraft to be retrofitted with hush kits, its directive did not apply to smaller jets," according to Mader.

Another concern is that although the proposed runway is supposed to be unidirectional, once a crush of planes occurs, Massport will have to use both directions, she said.

In addition, Massport's Blute told the community action committee's airside review committee that the airport would reach capacity again in another three to five years.

"I'm frustrated by the lack of a Massport master plan that has a long-range goal of addressing the growth of air travel."

"The Citizens Advisory Committee does not deny that air traffic is an economic generator," said Mader.

"It's a quality of life issue. It does not need to be diminished more and more. We are not anti-business. Massport has not looked at the larger picture," she said.

"Ten years ago the commonwealth made a half-hearted attempt at looking at a second major airport in Massachusetts."

"Massachusetts is way behind the curve, compared to Dallas-Fort Worth, New York or Chicago or Florida. It should have been building better terminals, Custom areas, garages... Massport has not kept pace with the aviation community."

She, along with DeLeo and others, says Massport needs to look seriously at Hanscom Airfield. "It has runway length and the instrumentation that can handle corporate and commuter traffic. It was built specifically for that type of traffic," and it is using only 40 to 50 percent of its capacity, perhaps even less, she said.

"It's only 20 minutes from Logan via Routes 2 and 93 or 128," she said.

Worcester Airport is a viable alternative as well. Although it is located at a higher elevation and sometimes is enveloped in fog, instrumentation has been developed so that aircraft can land with a vector green line. "It could become a main cargo airport for Massport, if not else, but it should be developed as a people carrier as well as a cargo facility," she said.

One problem is that Worcester is difficult to find, Mader continued, but the new state highway commissioner Matt Amorello, a former senator from Worcester, is expected to discuss with Blute the possibility of constructing a roadway to link the Mass. Pike to the airport, she said.

A rally against runway 14/32 is scheduled March 29 at the Statehouse and Boston Common. In addition, a web site has been established to oppose Massport's new runway proposal; its address is <http://www.stop1432.com>.

Copies of the environmental impact report are on file at several Boston libraries, including the one at Copley Square; however, the five branches in Dorchester have not been included in the distribution.

Two MEPA hearings have been scheduled: at 6:30 p.m. April 7 at the State Transportation Building, 10 Park Plaza, Boston, and at 6:30 p.m. April 8 at the Holiday Inn, 225 McClellan Highway, East Boston.

Written comments may be submitted to MEPA, attention Arthur Pugsley, EOE No. 10458, 100 Cambridge St., 20th Floor, Boston 02202, until April 23.

Another Delay And Concerns For Concourse

addition, small portions of Hancock, Mechanic and Elm Streets would be realigned.

The area between Mechanic Street and Hancock Street would be one-way westward bound, said Colton.

"How can you put all the work and money [into the concourse] and not allow cars to Revere Road?" said Councilor-at-large Paul Harold. "If traffic wants to go through, we should let it go. [This plan] is creating a new problem; the congestion is moved."

"This is a major project; we want to get through traffic out of downtown," Harold said.

"Obviously, we disagree," said Colton who did agree to look at the design again.

Traffic Engineer Jack Gillon said he had reviewed the conceptual plans and concurred that some fine-tuning remains.

Ward 2 Councilor Daniel Raymond said he was concerned that the new roadway would encourage speeding, especially if the improvements include landscaped median strips. "We need traffic calming devices," he said.

In 1982 Councilor-at-large Francis X. McCauley nixed the proposal for a cross-town connector. "Then, there was no Burgin Parkway. Now, I am trying to make sense of phase 2," he said.

Colton explained that the design is intended to make traffic to go downtown, not flow through. If it were two-way, there would be too much traffic. The benefit is to bring traffic into the center, he said.

In addition, the present design would at High School, Elm and Mechanic Streets would turn Elm Street into a secondary road, he said. This design, he said, would get some traffic out of some of the residential areas, like Miller Stile Road.

"It seems like a lot of landtaking," McCauley commented.

Colton said the present design requires the least amount of landtaking, but if the road becomes two-way, the intersection would have to be larger, and it would be more disruptive to downtown.

"This isn't perfect," he said of the design. "It doesn't give you everything you want," he told the councilors, adding that the "next challenge" is to address the need for parking.

The concourse will take between 75 and 80 spaces from the Hancock lot, he said, but added that the Ross Parking Garage could be improved to provide more parking.

Council President Peter Kolson pointed out that the Quincy Center Concourse is a state-funded project. The city is paying for the design costs and appraisals for the landtaking.

For the first phase of the project, six contractors bid; the lowest bidder was SPS New England of southern New Hampshire which bid $5.373 million.

Asked about the third phase of the concourse, Colton explained that the second phase was broadened to encompass the third phase so that funding for the remainder of the project be included in the state's fiscal year 2001 budget.

company, which creates a safety hazard."

But D'Amico's biggest concern is that allowing such a business in the area "sends the wrong message to a community" the city has been committed to revitalize, make safer and beautify.

"We have worked with the landlords [in the area] and the community to revitalize the area and bring about a better sense of community," D'Amico told the other councilors. "I am very concerned for the public safety of those who live, work and especially for the students who travel through Brewers Corner on a daily basis," he said.

The Brewers Corner address is Secon's latest in Quincy, according to Matthew Leahy, vice president of operations for Secon. Initially, it was located within the court's probation office on Hancock Street before moving to 1458 Hancock St., where Secon shared office space with Right Turn.

"It was not a good setup," Leahy said. When Secon moved to Brewers Corner March 1, it had signed a short-term lease, he said.

"We've been here in Quincy since September 1997," said Leahy who was somewhat surprised by neighborhood reaction to Secon's most recent move.

"We are looking for another site in Quincy; we don't want to find another site and have to move again. It's costly to move, install telephone lines," he said.

Leahy said Judge Coven had asked Secon to move out of its present offices last week. Coven was the state justice who entered into an agreement with Secon to provide the drug-testing services.

In addition to Quincy District Court, Secon works with the Dedham District Court as well as the Norfolk County Probate Court or family court, and administers drug tests as ordered by the court.

At Monday's council meeting D'Amico proposed an ordinance which would require the health board and the license board to issue permits for such drug testing centers.

Council President Peter Kolson pointed out that such a facility may fall under similar guidelines for group homes over which the city has no jurisdiction. "It's a big battle," said Kolson.

Sheets Concerned Over Fleet-BankBoston Merger

Mayor James Sheets knows that the proposed $16 billion merger of Fleet Financial Group and BankBoston Corp. will impact the city but is not sure how.

"It remains to be seen," he said, but did not discount the fact that laying off 5,000 and combining services would change the city's banking landscape.

He said he believed the city has money deposited with both financial institutions.

The granite tower in Quincy Square, believed to be the city's first skyscraper, bears the name of BankBoston after having served the community under several different names, including South Shore Bank and the Granite Trust Company, for nearly a century.

Today, BankBoston has five branches in the city, including consumer counters in the Stop & Shops on Southern Artery and Newport Avenue. Fleet maintains operates three branches in Quincy.

"It doesn't make a whole lot of sense to have two branches on the same block," he said. "You'll see consolidation, and they probably will provide less convenience."

"One of the interesting questions is what happens to the Bank of Boston in the old South Shore Bank," he said. It's owned by BankBoston, although most of the building is leased to other businesses.

"These are questions and we need answers," he continued. "I don't know how long the merger will take." Both state and federal regulators must approve the merger.

He said the small banks will try to take up the space left from the big banks and provide the services the megabanks cannot provide "to the little people."

As evidenced by the recent or anticipated move into Quincy of three smaller banks — Massachusetts Cooperative, South Shore Savings and South Shore Cooperative — opportunity exists to serve the small customer, Sheets pointed out.

Hospital Memorial Bricks Help Fight Breast Cancer

You can honor the memory of a friend or family member who has lost her life to breast cancer and help fight the disease by placing a memorial brick under Quincy Hospital Breast Center Memorial Tree, located near the main entrance to Quincy Hospital.

The bricks cost $125 each and proceeds will support women's imaging services at Quincy Hospital. While approximately one woman in eight in the United States will develop breast cancer during her lifetime, today women have the best chance every of overcoming the disease through early detection. Quincy Hospital is working to ensure that women in the community have the resources to detect breast cancer early enough to make a difference.

For more information or to place an order for the brick, call Jean Parker at the Quincy Hospital Health and Education Foundation at (617) 376-5495.

RIDE AND HANDLING

Ride and handling have traditionally posed a trade-off. Either a soft luxury-car ride came with too much body lean when cornering, or good handling came with a ride that was too firm. In recent years, however, car manufacturers have come up with an alchemist's blend of a firm, yet comfortable ride and responsive handling. Prospective car buyers are urged to evaluate these characteristics when test-driving a car. When evaluating the ride, they should take notice of the suspension's ability to soak up bumps. The car should exhibit neither a floaty feeling (that may reduce stability) nor a rough ride. As for handling, the car should take a corner with responsive steering, little body lean and no tire squeal.

HINT: When driven in a straight line, a test-driven car should be checked for any tendency to wander and steering wheel play.

For Outstanding Community Service Bob Curry Honored As Sun 'Citizen Of Year'

Quincy businessman Robert L. "Bob" Curry was honored Sunday as The Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year for outstanding community service through his long-time volunteer work in worthy causes.

The 14th annual Quincy Sun award was presented to him at a reception at the Quincy Sons of Italy Social Center.

More than 200 attended the event, including city and state officials, representatives of many organizations he has served with, past recipients of the award and family members.

Sun Publisher Henry Bosworth presented Curry with a clock plaque inscribed:

"To Robert L. Curry For Outstanding Community Service."

"Who truly believes in giving back to the community and does generously, faithfully and sincerely from the heart."

Bosworth said the clock is symbolic of all the time Curry has given to the community and continues to give.

"Bob isn't one to just lend his name to a letterhead," Bosworth said. "He rolls up his sleeves to work at it."

Bosworth cited Curry's personal philosophy: "It's nice to create business and some personal success, but it is important to give back to the community."

"He more than practices what he preaches," Bosworth said. "He gives it back by the bushel."

"You know, I think all of us here today would love to have Bob Curry as a next door neighbor."

Curry was selected for the award from among 48 nominees submitted by Sun readers. A panel of judges made the final selection.

Money Key Issue In Contract Dispute Teachers, And City Try Again

By MARILYN JACKSON

After a marathon session Monday night between the administration and the teachers, negotiations were scheduled to resume last night (Wednesday).

A mediator, Ted O'Brien, Monday night scurried between the school committee offices and City Hall, relaying the latest offers from each side to the other.

The Quincy Education Association with some 860 members has been working without a contract since Aug. 31, 1998. At last week's school committee meeting, scores of teachers filled the City Council chambers and spilled out into Constitution Park next to City Hall to show their solidarity behind their negotiating team.

The stalled talks focus on money.

The teachers argue they would like to be paid comparably to surrounding communities. Quincy Education Association President Paul Phillips said both Weymouth and Braintree have higher starting teacher salaries.

In Weymouth, a teacher with a bachelor's degree at step one received a salary of $27,553 as of Sept. 1, 1997; under the new contract, as of Sept. 1, 1998, a teacher at step one would earn a salary of $28,380.

In Braintree, a teacher with a bachelor's degree at step one received a salary of $26,131 as of Sept. 1, 1997; under that town's new contract, as of Sept. 1, 1998, a teacher at step one would earn a salary of $26,654. Another 1.5 percent increase was added as of Feb. 1, 1999.

In Quincy, a teacher with a bachelor's degree at step one received a salary of $25,272 as of Sept. 1, 1997. Under the original proposal, that salary would remain the same as of Sept. 1, 1998, but be increased by 2 percent March 1, 1999, to $25,777.

Mayor James Sheets, who is chairman of the school committee, said all of the unions in the city have been offered the same proposal: 0-2-0-3-0-4 which means 0 percent for the first 6 months, followed by 2 percent for the remainder of the first year; 0 percent at the start of the second year, followed by 3 percent at six months; 0 percent at the start of the third year, followed by 4 percent at six

McCullough: 'He Was A Full Character' C-SPAN Showcases John Adams' Legacy

By MARILYN JACKSON

The nation's first Presidential library — the Stone Library at the "Old House" or the Adams Mansion — was the setting Monday for a live C-SPAN broadcast about the life of President John Adams.

The show, which will be rebroadcast at 8 p.m. tomorrow, Friday, is the second of a series of Presidential portraits C-SPAN is producing in celebration of its creation 20 years ago as a public service by the cable television industry.

The 41-week series, "American Presidents: Life Portraits," first aired last week with a profile of President George Washington, was filmed at Mount Vernon and at other sites pertinent to his life. The programming will continue through December, consecutively featuring all America's Presidents, concluding with a visit to President William Clinton's birthplace in Arkansas.

Surrounded by 14,000 volumes of books, shelved to the ceiling, host Brian P. Lamb, president and CEO of C-SPAN, and noted historian David McCullough of West Tisbury chatted about the second President of the United States. McCullough was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for his 1993 biography of "Truman."

An engaging gentleman with snow-white hair, McCullough has immersed himself for the past five years in the life of John

Louis Cafe To Rebuild With A New Name

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

After many delays which included unrenewed building permits, Louis Cafe on Sea Street will be starting construction and changing its name to Louis Crossing.

The restaurant, which had been in existence since the 1930's burned down to the ground more than two years ago.

Owners Don Sartori and John Boyd told the license board at Tuesday's meeting that they were unaware of the process of renewing their building permits and apologized for that.

They said they hope to re-open the "family type" 96 seat restaurant in about four to five months.

Boyd said he hoped to have a "neighborhood friendly" establishment to better meet the needs of the neighborhood including a completely new parking area.

Adhering to the new rule adopted by the license board last month in which all liquor license holders must report to the board within 90 days with a progress report, owners of Louis Cafe appeared before the board with their construction plans.

Owners said they thought their liquor license was in jeopardy, but were assured by the board that unless the building does not progress in a timely fashion, then their license could in fact be revoked.

Ward 1 Councillor Peter Kolson made an attempt to try to change the closing hours from 1 a.m. to 12 midnight, but was told by City Solicitor Kevin Madden that the original license stated that the hours of closing would be 1 a.m.

The owners said it would be unfair to close them at midnight and allow Grumpy Whites and the Custom House to remain open until 1 a.m.

Boyd said if the hours to close were the same in those two restaurants, then he would go along with it. He added "don't tie our hands behind us and make them carte blanche, making us the only ones to conform."

Sartori complied and said it was "grossly unfair" to make a statement concerning Keno or to change their hours.

Fire Chief Thomas Gorman said the hours of operation are "still in force" as they were before the fire.

Kolson also said he was opposed to a Keno license, but was told that Louis Cafe previously owned a Keno license.

Shea said he would deal with the matter of Keno "if and when they apply."

Only one abutter expressed concern over the hours and if any entertainment was planned. Shea said entertainment license could be gotten on a "as needed" basis, for example at Christmas time or at St. Patrick's Day.

The abutter also bemoaned the fact that trees that used to create a buffer zone were removed. However, the owners said that all new landscaping would be done and that a "better buffer zone" would be in effect.

Madden warned the owners that no one is allowed to "carry a liquor license in their pocket", and since the licenses are at their maximum quota, he said if plans do not go forth as planned, the license can be terminated.

Teachers, City Contract Talks Continue

months. "I have the greatest respect for teachers," said the mayor, adding that his wife also taught. "We're trying to do everything possible, but we can't do the impossible."

"When you look at all the benefits the teachers receive — the city pays 90 percent of HMO costs and 75 percent of PPO — compared to contracts given to other cities and towns, Quincy stacks up very favorably."

"Certain communities pay more in certain categories, but many pay less in others," said the mayor.

Under the last three-year contract, which provided increases of 1.03, 1.04 and 1.04 percent, teachers also received $300 for supplies and funds for professional development.

Phillips said the city's offer to the teachers is the same for the public works department, the police and the firefighters. The police and public works employees have new three-year contracts, but the firefighters have not yet renewed their contract.

Phillips said however, that the retirement benefits offered to teachers are different from those offered to the police and that teachers do not receive overtime.

He said the teachers for a long time have had the ability to cash in on unused sick days, but the provisions in the police contract "are more generous."

Phillips said he would like to see a higher starting salary to attract new teacher and better provisions to let older teachers retire.

"But I'm optimistic we'll settle. I'm always optimistic. Hope springs eternal," he said.

He said he had asked the teachers to turn out in support during the last four school committee meetings. At the first meeting, about 80 showed up, at the second, 150; three weeks ago about 300 attended the meeting, and last week, when he asked for a showing by the full membership, more than 600 turned out.

"We're not going to do that any more. We tried, but apparently, [the turnouts] haven't worked."

Phillips discounted rumors about the possibility of a one-day teacher walkout the day after spring vacation. "There always will be rumors," he said. "We want to keep talking."

He added that two months ago, the negotiation team met with the citywide group of parents. "We're not going to do a 'work-to-rule' and not stay after school as needed. We're not taking away field trips or school trips to Washington. We're writing college recommendations, although most of those have already been completed," he said.

"We have always tried to be fair with the teachers," the mayor said last week. "I think teachers are wrongly criticized and bashed over testing. That's wrong. Teachers do a great job. It's the Department of Education that has had a detrimental impact on students and teachers."

"There's no one more important in the life of children than teachers," he said.

About Monday's six-hour-long negotiation session, the mayor said: "Obviously we would like to resolve the issues as quickly as possible, and our whole objective has been and always will be to give the teachers a fair contract."

"We want to be fair to the teachers and taxpayers and be fair to the Quincy public school system. As a [negotiating] committee, we're also ready to move forward and wind things up."

JENNIFER HIBBARD, a teacher at the Beechwood Knoll School, urged the school committee to approve the contract requests of fellow teachers. Teacher, who have been working without a contract for six and a half months, jammed the City Council chamber where the school committee met.

AN ESTIMATED 600 teachers with placards marched on City Hall last week to protest to Mayor James Sheets and the school committee for not settling a new contract. The old contract expired six and a half months ago. (Quincy Sun Photos/Robert Noble)

It's Now 'Hot Water'

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

The Ocean Club and Raw Bar on 319 Victory Rd at Marina Bay will change its name to Hot Water.

The License Board at Tuesday's meeting voted in favor of the change and also a change of managers from William O'Connell to Barbara Crispi.

Ed Kane, representing the new management showed design changes to the board and said most of the changes in the restaurant will be "cosmetic". This includes new colors, new carpets, seats and lighting.

He said the two buildings which were separated by two kitchens will now be connected as one, with one kitchen being more efficient.

He said they hope to make the restaurant an "upscale looking establishment."

The seating capacity will remain the same at 280 with 130 being outside seats.

Kane said renovations began about seven weeks ago and said they hoped for an opening at the end of April.

Board chairman Joseph Shea said the changes would be sent to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission (ABCC).

New Immunization Regulations For Entering Grade 7

New state immunization requirements for the school year 1999-2000 will affect all students entering Grade 7 this September.

Rosalie Barry, RN, Coordinator of Health Services for the Quincy public schools said those students will be required to have proof of the following:

- Second MMR (Measles, Mumps & Rubella)
- Three doses of Hepatitis B vaccine
- One or two doses of Varicella (Chickenpox)

• One Booster doses of Td (Tetanus/Diphtheria) if it has been five years or more since last one.

Immunization clinics will be offered this spring for these except for Varicella.

Parents or guardians are advised to check with the family doctor as those requirements must be completed before Sept. 1, 1999, Barry said.

Another Sheets' Sign

One more sign that Mayor James Sheets has no intentions to give up the key to the third floor office at City Hall any time soon.

He has all but officially announced he will seek a sixth term this year which would take him into the year 2001.

And, he obviously has No. 7 in mind.

At a recent meeting of department heads, Sheets noted he plans to be around to cut the ribbon at the new Quincy High School.

That school is expected to take at least four years to complete and open which would be around 2003. A seventh term would keep Sheets in office until then.

Right now there are no signals from the City Council that anyone there is thinking of challenging him. Sheets has already been re-elected to three terms without opposition. This year looks like it could be the fourth.

He still seems to enjoy being His Honor despite all the demands of the office.

He'd probably rather stay home a few nights with his feet on the coffee table watching TV or reading a good book instead of hitting the banquet circuit.

He could possibly have an opponent if he does run for a seventh term or he could decide to call it a career. But there are those who think he might be more likely to run for an eighth term.

Sheets' three terms without opposition made Quincy political history.

He is the only mayor ever re-elected to three terms unopposed. Two other mayors, Thomas Burgin and Frank McCauley had that honor once each.

Completing his current fifth term would give him 10 years in the mayor's office — the most under the present Plan A form of government. Charles Ross had nine.

And Sheets is closing in on Amelio Della Chiesa for all-time mayoral honors. Della Chiesa served 12 years but only eight under Plan A. He also had four years under Plan E but a city manager ran the city and the mayor was actually a city councillor with the title of mayor.

WILL THE MCINTYRE name be back on this year's city election ballot?

Charles McIntyre, son of the late Mayor-Senator James McIntyre, is thinking about a possible run for councillor at-large.

McIntyre made an impressive political debut in 1993 finishing in a strong runner-up spot in a five-candidate field in 1993, 920 votes behind former Mayor Joseph LaRaia, who won the third spot.

He got to serve LaRaia's term when the latter was named an assessor in August, 1995, but was not a candidate in the 1996 election.

McIntyre served as an assistant district attorney under both William Delahunt and Jeff Locke. He's now with a Dorchester law firm headed by House Speaker Thomas Finneran.

Will McIntyre run?

"Right now I am giving it some thought," he says.

HERE'S ONE: Councillor Dan Raymondi has lived in three different wards—in the same house.

His home on Elm St. at Miller Stile Rd. was in Ward 1 in 1972. Through redistricting, it became part of Ward 2, then Ward 3 and back to the present Ward 2 which he represents.

He almost wound up in Ward 5. The Dennis Sweeney Funeral Home across the street from him is in Ward 5.

Oh, for the good old days. That's when Ward 1 ran from Houghs Neck to Hospital Hill, Ward 2 was Quincy Point, Ward 3 South Quincy, Ward 4 West Quincy, Ward 5 Wollaston and Ward 6 North Quincy.

A lot easier back then to keep track of political players and who they represented.

IT'S BACK IN the political saddle for former City Councillor Richard Koch, Jr.

Koch, who had a promising political career here but left Quincy 10 years ago for the Cape, is running for the Brewster seat on the Nauset Regional School Board.

He was being urged to run for selectman but he is a member of the Brewster police department and that would have been a conflict.

His wife, Nancy, is a teacher in Chatham but there is no problem with that because Koch would be representing Brewster and not Chatham on the school board if elected.

Koch, incidentally, has a private detective sideline with a partner.

ASST. CITY CLERK Maureen

Hallsen is convalescing at home after a hospital stay for a throat infection. She hopes to be back at her desk next week.

AND, Rep.-Councillor Bruce Ayers is sporting a cast on his right hand. He was doing some renovation work at home when a dryer tipped over on his hand, fracturing a bone. But it's not slowing him down.

SMILE DEPT.: At the Quincy Partnership's St. Patrick's Day luncheon and roast at the Quincy Elks, the menu was, of course, corned beef and cabbage with all the trimmings.

So, what does Mike Morrissey do? He calls up and has a pizza delivered to Mike Bellotti at his table.

'Super Soapy' On Handwashing Visits Here

"Super Soapy" will make two visits to Quincy today (Thursday) as part of the Massachusetts Medical Society (MMS) "Good Health In Your Hands" campaign.

The stops will be at 9:30 a.m. at the Beechwood Knoll School in 11 a.m. at Campus Kinder Haus School at Eastern Nazarene College.

"Super Soapy" and Susan Pike, a nurse, will teach children about the importance of handwashing.

According to the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, poor handwashing results in an estimated 60,000 hospitalizations, 250 deaths, and as many as 1 million incidents of gastrointestinal illness each year.

The MMS has also designed a handwashing curriculum for pre-school and early elementary school-aged children, which uses games and art projects to emphasize that handwashing is an important part of staying healthy.

FRANCIS PARKER SCHOOL.

NORFOLK DOWNS, MASS.

THIS 1929 POSTCARD shows the Francis W. Parker School on the corner of Billings and Faxon Roads in Norfolk Downs. Not usually pictured from this angle, it takes a few seconds to recognize the school in this view. Built in 1919, it was named in honor of Quincy's first school Superintendent who developed and implemented the widely adopted 'Quincy System.' Colonel Parker was nationally recognized as a leader in post civil war education reform, primarily for his system that pretty much revolutionized methods of teaching used at that time.

Ethel Kennedy Launches Cargo-Liner

By PAUL HAROLD

Mrs. Robert F. Kennedy, wife of the Attorney General, launched the S.S. American Contractor at Bethlehem Steel's Fore River shipyard.

Although it was the first day of spring, there were eight inches of snow on the morning of the ceremony. Mrs. Kennedy was a last minute substitute for her sister-in-law, Mrs. Edward Kennedy, the ship's sponsor. Mrs. Edward Kennedy was expecting a baby and was unable to participate.

The U.S. Lines cargo-liner was the ninth in a series of "challenger" class vessels, with six built at Fore River.

Matron of honor with Mrs. Robert Kennedy was Mrs. George Mallett of Quincy. She was a stenographer at the yard and also the secretary and alternate steward for Local 90.

CONTESTANTS FOR MISS QUINCY CONTEST

The Quincy Jaycees were seeking contestants for the scholarship pageant, scheduled for the Art Theater on Hancock St., May 11.

Donald Burke, chairman of the entries committee, said the winner would receive a $300 scholarship and would automatically be eligible to compete in the Miss Massachusetts competition. Assisting Burke was Joanne Vissa, Miss Quincy 1962.

Entrants had to be a high school graduate, between the ages of 18-28, and never been married.

HOSPITAL RATES RAISED $2 TO $5

Quincy City Hospital Director Harlan Paine announced an increase in hospital rates, ranging from $2 to $5. He said the increases were necessary to meet increasing costs, pegged at eight percent for the coming year, based mostly upon salary increases.

Paine said that the new rates would cover the actual costs of providing care. The only deficit covered by city taxes was for "free care" of the indigent.

Under the new rates, Quincy residents would pay $33-$35 for a private room in the new wing, with non-residents paying $36-$38. Residents would pay $25 for a private room in the old wing.

READERS FORUM

Teachers Deserve Fair And Equitable Contract

Editor, The Quincy Sun,

I am taking this opportunity to write on behalf of the Quincy Education Association, of which I am a member, in my role as Latin and English teacher at North Quincy High School.

This year marks my first experience with the Quincy Public School system and, midway through the year, I am left with mixed emotions: thrilled that I teach in a city where I have always hoped to establish a career in education, and distressed by Mayor Sheets' unwillingness to agree to an appropriate contract with the QEA.

I have long dreamed of teaching in the Quincy Public Schools system. Although I did not spend my childhood in Quincy, I have known of the city for my entire life. My father grew up in Quincy Point, and he still speaks fondly of his childhood home. Several aspects drew me to a career in Quincy: the sense of community, the civic pride, and the long standing tradition for quality in education. I came to the Boston area, and particularly Quincy, in search of these qualities.

I have not been disappointed. Although I worked with a fine group of educators during my previous position in another Boston area community, my expectations have been exceeded by my short tenure at North Quincy High School. I am impressed by the quality of academic, sports, and extracurricular programs offered here, and the high school's dedication to continuing this high level of excellence. In addition, the experience, knowledge, skill, and dedication of the faculty astounds me. The parents of our students consistently display commitment to our public schools and a quality education. I have found an ideal home for a career in education.

However, my enthusiasm wanes due to the current failure to reach a contract agreement. I did not enter this vocation with aspirations of wealth. Naturally, I would like to be compensated for my efforts in a way that allows me to support myself. I struggle with ex-orbitant school loans from a previous graduate degree, in addition to the costs of current graduate work that I am undertaking in order to continually meet state teacher requirements. I simply ask for fair and reasonable wages.

During a fall breakfast in honor of State Street Bank's Partnership with NQHS, Mayor Sheets spoke of the admiration and respect that he possesses for our faculty. The greatest sign of respect that Mayor Sheets can offer is a fair and equitable contract for Quincy Public School Teachers.

Testing Teachers

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

I had not followed the issue of teacher testing that closely. Although many other professions require that their professionals be certified, I guess I really did not agree with the Governor on teacher testing.

After watching the behavior of the Quincy teachers on television and reading about them in the papers, I have changed my mind.

Teachers should not only be tested for academic competence, but also for emotional stability and pure human judgment.

Respect Is Earned

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

What a great civics lesson. I watched the School Committee meeting on cable last week. I have been out of school for some time, but what a lesson I learned.

I saw teachers holding signs asking for respect. These same teachers then refused to give anyone else any respect, often drowning out Mayor Sheets; attempt to address the audience. They even yelled at him, booed, hissed, and called him a liar while he tried to address them.

They don't make people more courteous than our Mayor Jim Sheets. If they want respect, they must understand that respect is earned: not simply given.

What a lesson for our children: "Do as I say: not as I do on public television, in an open forum, to the leader of our city." Is this type of behavior of people who we are supposed to trust our children with?

Stuffed Pork Chops For Two

It is a rare occasion at our house when I cook for two, my husband and me.

But it happened last week when I went to the market and bought two large center cut thick pork chops, and decided to stuff them. When they were done, they seemed a lot more tender this way.

Stuffed Pork Chops for Two

- 2 thick pork chops
- 1/2 cup bread crumbs
- salt and pepper to taste
- 1 teaspoon chopped onion
- 3 tablespoons milk
- 1 teaspoon fresh parsley (minced)
- 2 tablespoons grated cheese

Cut a pocket on the side of each chop. Combine all ingredients and mix well.

Stuff each chop with bread mixture.

Place in shallow pan and bake in a 350 degree oven about an hour or until tender.

I served this with sweet potatoes and fresh asparagus. I don't know if it was the pork chops or the lighted candles, but my husband was impressed!

(Marie D'Olimpio has written a cookbook containing recipes printed in The Quincy Sun.)

It is available at the Fruit Basket (near Star Market), Previte's Market on Summer Street, Nanci's Barbershop, Elm Street, Braintree, the Cherry Gift Shop at Quincy Hospital, and Curry's Hardware, Copeland Street.

Four Quincy Residents Perform In Thayer's 'Tommy'

'Week Of The Child' Activities Begin April 2

Mayor James Sheets will officially kick off the festivities for April 2 Week of the Young Child at the Snug Harbor-Head Start.

The mayor at 9 a.m. will greet parents, children, and teachers for a continental breakfast, story time and music program. Invited guests will see firsthand how high-quality early childhood services are meeting the needs of young children and their families in our community.

This year's Week of the Young Child theme, "The Early Years are Learning Years....Make Them Count!" is a reminder that early childhood lays the foundation for all later learning and shapes whether children succeed in school and later life. The Week of the Young

Child is a time to reflect on how well children's experience in Quincy are preparing them to take full advantage of their educational opportunities and to become effective citizens, capable workers, and loving parents of the next generation and to develop specific strategies for improving the quality of life for young children in our community.

Other activities through the Week, sponsored locally by the Quincy Coalition for Children & Families will include: Parent Workshops, Children's Activities and Family Events.

All event details are listed in a Calendar of Events available at all public school, private day care centers, preschool programs and children services organizations.

For more information about the celebration or planned events, contact Jeanne Satterlund, 472-2960 or Nancy Harvey, 984-8777.

The Quincy Coalition for Children & Families is a voluntary organization of early childhood professionals with more than 20 members, founded in 1993. The QCCF is affiliated with the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC), the nation's largest association of early childhood professionals, with more than 90,000 members. NAEYC and its Affiliated Groups are committed to improving the quality of early childhood services available to children from birth through age 8 - the critical years of development.

Foot Notes

by Dr. Richard A. Hacker
Surgeon-Podiatrist

CALLUSED AND FISSURED HEELS

A callus is the body's way of thickening skin to offer greater protection to tender areas that are subject to repeated friction or trauma. A callused heel usually develops when the heel is continually rubbed by a sock and/or an ill-fitting shoe. When this occurs, the tender skin is caught between the heel bone and the shoe; the thickening tries to protect against further irritation. Open-backed sandals exacerbate the problem by both moving counter to the direction of the foot as well as slapping against the foot with each step. Occasionally, thick calluses may crack and bleed, and these painful fissures may become infected if not treated. Your podiatrist's care can help with this painful condition.

Your feet aren't supposed to hurt but are they supposed to hurt you. Calluses, dry skin, corns, blisters, bunions, hammertoes - there just isn't any reason to suffer with them any longer. We treat patients of all ages for all kinds of podiatric problems, from minor to major to the prevention of both. Here at 110 W. Squantum Street in North Quincy, your feet are our business and our practice has been designed with you, our patient, in mind. Call (617) 472-3466 for an appointment for family foot care.

P.S.: If you are developing callused heels, discontinue wearing any shoes that cause even minimal discomfort.

SOCIAL

'Rails To Trails' Historical Society Topic

The Quincy Historical Society to meet at 7:30 p.m. March 25 at the Adams Academy, will focus on the successful "Rails to Trails" movement.

Throughout the country disused railroad track rights of way are being turned into biking trails and bicycle paths, in manners that both restore the landscape and preserve the past.

Craig Della Penna, New England Field

Representative for the Rails-to-Trails Conservancy, a national non-profit organization with more than 85,000 members across the country, has extensive professional experience in rail and transportation businesses. He is the author of Great Rail Trails of the Northeast, Images of Holyoke, and The Great Rails-Trails of New Jersey.

Della Penna has personally visited and catalogued every mile of more than 150 rail-trails in the region and is one of the nation's leading experts on the movement and on the history and economic development aspects it provides. He will present an illustrated lecture on historic trails in New England, New York, New Jersey, and Virginia and will discuss how these trails help to promote a sense of community and a sense of place.

The public is invited. There is no charge.

'Starting Over' For Seniors Launched At Beechwood Center

A new informal, friendly discussion program for senior citizens called "Starting Over" has been launched at Beechwood on the Bay, announces Executive Director Sharron Beals. "We are living longer lives than our parents and grandparents did. Our life stories are longer and can be likened to a good book having more chapters and choices," Beals said.

That basic premise, coupled with the reality that more and more mature adults (age 55 and over) are facing chapters of loss and change (death, divorce, leaving the family home, relocating, etc.) led to the program experiment at the Center.

Mary Centola-Gougian, director of Elder Services, found a block of time when her multipurpose room was available on Friday afternoons. With the help of several volunteers, she has launched a "Starting Over" activity at Beechwood.

"Every Friday we gather to socialize, snack, find common interests and meet new people," said Centola-Gougian. "Some play darts or cards; others may watch a movie, help with a volunteer project, or just visit."

Recently there was a "circle" discussion about Y2K issues. When participants leave the Center at the end of the activity, some head for home, others go for dinner together at a nearby restaurant.

"Starting Over," held Fridays from 2 to 4:30 p.m., is an informal, friendly Center activity open to all seniors without cost. A "contribution box" is available, however, to help with refreshment costs.

"We do encourage advance 'courtesy' reservations for planning purposes. However, drop-ins are welcome. We want this to be a positive and casual activity-of-choice," said Beals. "And so encourage those who choose at the last minute to come."

For more information about "Starting Over" or Beechwood's other senior programs and activities, call 617-471-5712.

Hancock Park Hosts Vintage Fashion Show

Residents, friends, families and staff of Hancock Park Rehabilitation and Nursing Center in Quincy were recently entertained with a Vintage Fashion Show planned and produced by Ginny Sweeney, activity coordinator of the Adult Day Health Center.

The gala showcased Sweeney's collectible apparel from the early 1900's through the 1980's.

Apparel modeled for approximately 100 guests included two wedding dresses, one of which was 50 years old and belongs to Eleanor Brown, a member of Adult Day Health; a 1930 Persian lamb coat, a 1920 "flapper" dress, and a World War II navy uniform.

Models for the Vintage Fashion Show included Sweeney, staff from various departments at Hancock Park, and members of the Adult Day Health Center.

Hancock Park, located on the Parkway in Quincy Center, is owned and managed by Norwell-based Welch Healthcare & Retirement Group, and is a 142-bed skilled rehabilitation and nursing center that also provides sub-acute care, specialized Alzheimer's programs, Adult Day Health, and Assisting Living residences.

VENOUS ULCERS

It is a well known fact that "incompetent" leg veins can lead to ulcers (sores), particularly around the ankles. Quite often the cause of the incompetent leg vein is due to malfunctioning valves within the veins. Unfortunately, often inherited in the form of varicose veins.

The ulcer results from increased pressure within the veins that is transferred to the capillaries of the skin. This build-up of pressure results in the break down of tissue and an ulcer forms.

Treatment includes compression therapy, wound dressings and sometimes antibiotics and even skin grafts. There are some new treatments that include growth stimulating factors and tissue culture techniques.

If you have ulcers or varicose veins which are affecting the skin around your feet or ankles you may want to consult a qualified Podiatrist.

If you are suffering from these or any other foot related complaints, call us at 773-4300. We are located at 1261 Furnace Brook Parkway, Suite #18, Quincy, and are affiliated with Carney, Quincy and South Shore Hospitals.

HUD Guidelines Needed For Squantum Gardens

By MARILYN JACKSON

The proposal to develop an assisted living facility and a senior center at Squantum Gardens won't move forward until the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development develops guidelines for the $30 million project, according to assistant city solicitor James Timmins.

"We've been waiting for the conveyance and expected that to occur in late 1997," he told the City Council last week. Now, he expects it will happen within the next 30 to 60 days.

Councillors last week took issue with the fact that the Navy, which previously had owned the site in conjunction with its operations at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, will be transferring the 27-acre site directly to two non-profit 501 (c) 3 corporations Senior Housing Inc., which will oversee the housing at Naval Terrace, and Elder Services Inc., which will manage the senior center and assisted living facility.

But Timmins said Congress had passed a bill which would allow such an occurrence.

"The mayor saw this as an opportunity to not tie up city funds; it would free up the city regarding bonding and liability, but the city is still a participant," he said.

Casimir Kolaski, president of Kolaski Housing Advisors Inc. of Providence, R.I., a former HUD official who now is serving as a consultant to the developer for Squantum Gardens, told the councillors that the city retains control through the Council on Aging, which serves at the request of the mayor. Bylaws of the non-profits specify that the Council on Aging approves their officers as well as the Squantum Gardens director.

"I wish the City Council had more input into the structure of the non-profits," said Councillor-at-large Paul Harold. When he asked who made the selection of the contractor, Consultants Inc. of Providence, Timmins said it was the mayor, along with the planning department and Bernice Mader, the mayor's administrative assistant.

Timmins pointed out there are only five such projects in the country which are building senior housing along with assisted living facilities, and Consultants Inc. is doing two of them.

"These non-profits have no track record, no assets on paper. Why didn't you consider an existing non-profit, like the Quincy Point Housing Corp., the Community Action Council or the Archdiocese that has a track record?"

He also questioned how an out-of-state firm which uses non-union contractors placed first in the selection of a company which will design, build and manage the project.

"Whether they are union or not, I don't know. They conform with the prevailing wage regulations," said Timmins.

Harold asked about what controls would HUD have in selecting the residents, and Timmins pointed out that the development was not subsidized housing and would not have an active role.

HUD wants to be sure that the housing is affordable, added Kolaski. "Residents must meet certain income guidelines," added Timmins.

But when questioned further by Harold, Kolaski acknowledged that if an individual were burned out of his home in the South End, that candidate would jump ahead of any Quincy resident on a waiting list for Squantum Gardens housing.

However, Quincy residents can be given preference because the city's minority population is about 20 percent, he said. "HUD doesn't want any vacant housing; it's a preference, not an exclusion," said Kolaski.

"HUD is subsidizing the purchase," Timmins continued. The land, believed to be valued between $3 million and $4 million, will be transferred to the non-profits for $1.

"The transfer is a public benefit. The reason HUD will convey the land for $1 is that it will keep the rental cost down," said Kolaski. "Whatever acquisition cost there is would be passed on."

And, HUD will guarantee the loans to the non-profits which will secure the financing. In addition, the rental income from Naval Terrace will provide revenues for the project as it is developed in phases.

The assisted living facility, which will have a unit for those with Alzheimer's Disease, will generate revenue too. That information will be presented as part of the mortgage application.

When the land transfer takes place, the non-profits will seek the necessary approvals from the various local boards, such as the zoning board of appeals and the conservation commission.

There are flood plain issues, Timmins said, and the senior center will need some relief.

Helen Murphy, an aide to Mayor James Sheets, has been involved in the project for more than two years. "The architects are working on finalizing the senior center and assisted living facility," she said during a recent interview.

"It's a phenomenal project," said Murphy, predicting it will serve as a national model.

All 48 two-bedroom units at Naval Terrace are rented, and seniors moved into those apartments in December 1997. In addition, a new building with 14 one-bedroom apartments for independent seniors will be built along Naval Terrace.

At Squantum Gardens, which lies near the intersection of Quincy Shore Drive and East Squantum Street, 24 duplexes will be converted to a total of 96 apartments — 70 one-bedroom units, 20 two-bedroom units and six efficiency or studio units. Some of these buildings had been used by the Navy as family housing and contained four bedrooms with enormous living room space, she said.

In this area, a large 100-unit assisted living facility and a senior center will be constructed in one building, she said. The structure also will house five units of transitional housing for homeless families, plus administrative offices.

Quincy Hospital Opens New Cardiology/Nuclear Medicine Suite

Quincy Hospital has opened a newly expanded and upgraded Cardiology/Nuclear Medicine Suite.

The new suite, constructed on the second floor, allows patients easier access to the services and is located in close proximity to other emergent patient care areas. The expanded area houses two stress labs and other diagnostic testing capabilities.

The new equipment includes a Picker dual head nuclear imaging camera and a Hewlett Packard Stress Echocardiography System. The nuclear imaging camera traces the travel of nuclear markers and aids in the diagnosis of cardiac abnormalities, bone cancers, pulmonary blood clots, as well as diseases of other organs.

The echocardiography system provides a non-invasive means of looking inside the heart to diagnose abnormalities of the heart valves and walls and blood flow. When used in conjunction with the stress testing equipment, this device can detect cardiac abnormalities that can be treated before they have a chance to cause harm.

The cost of the new suite and equipment was defrayed by a donation from the Quincy Hospital Auxiliary, a volunteer group that raises money to help the hospital purchase new equipment and undergo construction projects.

The City Hospital of Quincy Corporation, an endowment set up many years ago, purchased a dry laser image printer for the suite. The printer, essential during the nuclear medicine testing process, provides clear images for the radiologist to review and thereby determine the extent of various diseases.

Bob Curry Honored As Sun 'Citizen Of Year'

names of the 47 other nominees and the judges. Copies were distributed to those attending.

State House commendations and congratulations were presented to Curry by Senator Michael Morrissey and Reps. Bruce Ayers, Ronald Mariano and Stephen Tobin. Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti appointed him an Honorary Deputy Sheriff.

Mayor James Sheets said Curry was most deserving of the award.

"Those elected to office are paid to do good things. But there are people out there and the person of the day, Bob Curry, who aren't paid to do good things.

"Bob Curry is an extraordinarily successful businessman. He doesn't have to be compassionate. He doesn't have to be understanding. He doesn't have to be involved and he doesn't have to show others how it's done. He doesn't have to give up time. But he's done all that.

"All you have to do is look at the laundry list of associates and organizations Bob Curry belongs to recognize that there's no one more deserving of this award than Bob Curry."

The mayor recalled meeting Curry as many as 30 years ago at his hardware store. "The most amazing thing to me," Sheets continued, "is he's never changed. He's been the same every day, every week, every month and every year. He's the same compassionate, giving, good person today. He's hilarious and many times he makes us laugh.

"To you Bob, and your family congratulations. There couldn't have been a better choice. We appreciate you, we love you and we look forward to working with you for many, many years to come."

In his acceptance, Curry thanked The Quincy Sun and the panel of judges for bestowing the honor.

"I am truly honored to accept this wonderful award as The Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year. I know a lot of work goes into the award and I appreciate that I was picked."

Curry also thanked his family for "all their love and support and all the patience because of all the times that I'm out of the house at night and all the meetings that I go to."

Curry credited his father, Paul, for giving him the opportunity to be active in the community.

"I am very fortunate because I was able to step into a business that was up and going and was already a great business. My dad worked awfully hard—nine children in our family and he never had anyone working for him other than his own children."

Curry said the family business began with only a few supplies—and not a lot of money.

"He struggled day in and day out to put milk and bread on the table. I was real fortunate to step into a growing business, a real successful business."

Curry, a lifelong resident of Quincy, and owner of the Curry ACE Hardware Stores and a Marine Purple Heart veteran of the Vietnam War, was nominated for the award by Don Uvanitte who himself is involved in many charitable and civic causes. He cited Curry's "continued efforts to assist those in need."

The civic and charitable causes in which Curry is actively involved are many.

The one closest to his heart is the Marie A. Curry Foundation he established at Quincy Hospital in memory of his wife, Marie, who died in 1995 at age 52 from breast cancer.

Curry donated $100,000 to create the foundation shortly after his wife's death to provide mammograms especially for women not covered by health insurance.

Last September, hundreds of friends, volunteers and residents joined Curry and his family in the first Marie Curry Walk which raised $80,000 for the foundation to continue its fight against breast cancer through awareness and early detection.

His wife, Cheryl, son, Sean, and daughter, Julie, helped organize the walk with the Quincy Hospital Health and Education Foundation and the Mayor's Commission on the Status of Women.

A second walk is planned for Sept. 19 with the hope it might raise as much as $150,000 for the worthy cause.

Another of Curry's involvement is the Quincy Partnership, a group of civic-minded individuals working together in community causes.

The Partnership raised funds for the attractive "Welcome to Quincy" signs at the entrances to the city, and for the spotlighting of historic sites old City Hall, First Parish Church, Adams Academy and the Crane Public Library. The group also financed the commissioning of the Abigail Adams statue beside First Parish Church.

The Partnership's next goal is a decorative water fountain for Merrymount Park which will cost an estimated $100,000.

Curry's present and past affiliations are many. A few of them include:

The Quincy Hospital Health and Education Foundation, Quincy Commission on the Family, Quincy Flag Day Committee, Quincy Historical Society, Quincy Neighborhood Housing Services, Beechwood Community Life Center, Quincy 2000, South Shore Chamber of Commerce, South Shore Economic Development Corporation, Quincy Rotary Club, Morrisette Legion Post, Caddy Marine Detachment, Disabled American Veterans and the Quincy Sons of Italy.

Being active in the city, Curry said, has been a "labor of love."

"We're truly blessed to have a wonderful mayor, we have a great city council and they work together really well. We have great departments in this city, and I'm not saying this just to pat them on the back."

For instance, he noted the progress of the city's Cleaner, Greener program which some kidded 10 years ago. "Now we look around our city and what happens this spring when our city just comes alive and everyone's out there planting flowers and all the work they do and all the different island that people support," Curry said.

He also mentioned strides taken by Quincy Hospital and the School Department.

"We recently dedicated the Clifford H. Marshall Elementary School and we're building a new Quincy High School," he said, noting improvements to Central Middle School.

As for Quincy Hospital, Curry said, "We're very fortunate to have a local community hospital. It's now a great hospital and it's going to be an even greater hospital when we partner up. They mayor has assured us that we're going to work very, very diligently to partner up with one of five or six possible suitors and we're going to have a wonderful community hospital."

Discussing his involvement in other organizations, Curry turned the spotlight on others.

"The Mayor's Commission on the Status of Women is a great, great group of women who helped us on the walk for the Marie Curry Fund." The walk raised $80,000 for the fund but Curry said that's only half the story.

He said the hospital's Health and Education Foundation actually has close to $250,000 because of unanticipated additional funding. "They (the state) have seen the effort we have put in as a community. The state sees what we're doing and gives us more money for other care programs. Therefore, our $250,000 and the interest on it goes much further because the state sees the effort that our community has put in."

As a Quincy Rotarian, Curry said he's met some wonderful people in the club. "Most of the people in the city don't realize what the service clubs do, the Lions,

IT WAS A proud day for the family of Bob Curry as he was honored as The Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year at a reception Sunday at the Quincy Sons of Italy Social Center. From left are son Sean Curry, father Paul Curry, wife Cheryl, Curry, daughter Julie, and daughter-in-law Tara Curry.

Kiwanis, Rotary. Rotary probably gives back 90 percent if not 100 percent of their money to the children of the city through scholarships and different things we do for the children."

He described the Quincy Partnership as a wonderful group of people with no ego problems. "We sit around and laugh for about an hour and then we go out and do the work. No one wants to take credit for anything." Curry noted it was local businessman Mark Bertman who originated the partnership concept "because he loves this city so much."

"Our city is alive on every corner," Curry said. He noted development at Crown Colony, the revitalization of Quincy Point and plans to reopen the Fore River shipyard and create a 27-hole golf course on the site of the old landfill in West Quincy. He also praised Peter and Billy O'Connell for their foresight in establishing Marina Bay. "How many communities have a Marina Bay?" Curry asked. "It's a pleasure to stand out and see what the O'Connells have done for Marina Bay."

Curry characterized the city's business districts as thriving and clean. "Quincy Center looks beautiful. Norfolk Downs looks beautiful. Wollaston looks beautiful. All the historical lighting looks beautiful. We look prosperous and we're becoming more prosperous all the time. People drive through our city and they can't believe how beautiful it is."

He said he is proud to be a part of this city.

"Of all the things I've said today I don't want you to think I'm taking credit for them because I'm not. I have not done any of it. I'm just proud of the things the people of this city have done. I'm very proud to be a part of this city."

A HOUSE OF Representatives resolution commending and congratulating Bob Curry as The Quincy Sun Citizen of the Year was presented to him by Rep. Stephen Tobin, Rep. Ronald Mariano and Rep. Bruce Ayers.

THE QUINCY PARTNERSHIP of which Bob Curry is an active member was out in full force to help honor him as The Sun Citizen of the Year. Seated with Curry are Maureen Rogers (left) and Quincy Historical Society President Joyce Baker. Standing, Tom Koch, executive director Quincy Park-Forestry-Cemetery Departments; Robert Galligan, Don Uvanitte, president of the Quincy Hospital Health and Education Foundation who nominated Curry for the award; School Committeeman Michael McFarland, Mark Bertman and Tom Galvin.

Daniel Graham, pastor St. Joseph's Church. Ryan and Beals were members of the panel that selected Curry from among 48 nominees for the award.

AMONG THOSE ATTENDING the reception honoring Bob Curry were, Don Gohl, Bank of Canton; Mary Vallier, 1993 recipient of The Sun Citizen of the Year Award, and Gloria and Robert Noble, who assisted in the Marie A. Curry Walk.

Sales Of Multi-Family Homes Rise 11 Percent In Bay State

The state's multi-family housing market continued to show sharp improvement in 1998 as sales of two-, three- and four-family homes increased 11.6 percent during the past year, rising from 5,719 units closed in 1997 to 6,384 last year, according to data compiled by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors® (MAR).

The annual increase reflects a seven-year trend of steady sales growth in the multi-family market, with last year's sales gain the largest since 1994 when sales rose nearly 27 percent in the Bay State.

"It's been a record year for homes sales in Massachusetts, and that includes the multi-family market," said MAR President James Dougherty. "In particular, two- and three-family homes have become very popular among younger, first-time buyers who can't quite afford a detached single-family home, and immigrants who want to live with their extended families."

Fueled by low mortgage rates, a tight rental housing market, and the more flexible down payment requirements permitted for owner-occupied two- and three-family dwellings, the multi-family market held its own against the single-family market in 1998. Sales of 2-4 family homes outpaced 1997 performance levels in all four quarters, improving 6 percent in the first quarter, 9.6 percent in the second quarter, 18.8 percent in the third quarter and 10.8 percent in the final quarter of 1998 vs. the comparable periods on year earlier.

Multi-family sales also improved in all market areas in 1998, with double-digit sales gains over 1997 observed in the Central (+21.5%), greater Boston (+11.8%), Northeast (+13.5%) and South Shore (+16.5%) regions, and modest growth of 2-4 percent reported elsewhere.

In its report, the MAR

also found the total dollar volume for multi-family home sales increased an impressive 34.3 percent in 1998, climbing from $737,503,591 one year ago to $990,810,173 in 1998. While specific price comparisons are not available for two-, three- and four-family homes separately, this sharp increase in total dollar volume indicates property values are on the rise in the multi-family market. In particular, regional dollar volume data suggests the average selling

SPOTLIGHT ON HEALTH & FITNESS

Health Tips For Dental Care

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Massachusetts (BCBSMA) want to remind you that regular visits to the dentist, proper self-care measures, and simple precautions can help prevent toothaches, gum disease and injuries.

Correct self-care includes daily brushing and flossing, good nutrition, and using fluoridated water, toothpaste, and rinses. The following are simple self-care solutions for common dental problems.

Toothaches can be felt in or around a tooth, and are usually the result of a cavity or gum infection. If you notice a sensitivity to hot, cold or sweet foods, brown spots or little holes on a tooth, a change in the way your teeth fit together, or loose adult teeth:

• Take an aspirin to reduce discomfort (Note: Do not give aspirin to anyone 19 years of age or younger, unless directed by a physician, due to its association with Reye's syndrome, a potentially fatal condition.)

• Hold an ice pack on the jaw to relieve the pain.

• Gargle with warm salt water every hour.

Gum disease is the result of plaque buildup, crooked teeth, poorly fitting dentures, trapped food particles and certain medications. These things can irritate or destroy your gums, causing your teeth to loosen and fall out.

Good oral hygiene can prevent gum disease, and, by visiting your dentist regularly, gum disease in its early stages can be caught and treated easily. Some warning signs of gum disease are:

• Swollen, red gums that bleed easily, a condition called gingivitis.

• Teeth that are exposed at the gum line, separating from each other or loose.

• Pus around gums and teeth.

• Bad breath and/or foul taste in the mouth.

If a tooth does get knocked out:

• Rinse the tooth with clear water and gently put it back in the socket or hold it under your tongue. Otherwise, put it in a glass of milk or a wet cloth.

• If gum is bleeding; hold a gauze pad or tissue tightly in place over the wound.

• Try to get to the dentist as soon as possible. Successful reattachment of the tooth is possible within hours after it is knocked out. After 24 hours, however, the chance is small.

A Dozen Healthy Habits For Consumption works well.

• Eat slowly in a relaxed atmosphere. It takes approximately 15 minutes to send a physiological message from your stomach to your brain. Generally, the faster you eat, the more you eat.

• Make an appointment for exercise. Mark it on your calendar.

• Keep a comfortable pair of shoes in the car and go for a walk in your neighborhood, park or shopping before going home. If you go home, you probably won't leave the house again.

• Cut calories by using zero-calorie beverages such as water, club soda, seltzer, plain or herbal tea, coffee and sugar-free beverages. These zero-calorie beverages will replace more calorie-dense drinks such as juice, fruit punch, sweetened ice tea, lemonade and sodas.

• Remember that 10-minute sessions of exercise add up. Fit them in where you can.

• Weight training with light one- or two-pound weights not only sculpts and tones your body, but also raises your metabolism. The more lean muscle you have, the more calories you'll burn.

• Learn strategies that help you permanently control your weight. Take a class that is run by a registered dietitian to learn how portion control, behavior modification, and exercise can help you lose weight safely and successfully. Unlocking The Mystery Of Hypertension (NAPS)—Up to 95 percent of people with hypertension are told that the cause is a mystery. A new book helps unlock this mystery by revealing the powerful yet unrecognized effects of "hidden emotions" on blood pressure.

(Wiley, $24.95 hardcover), author Samuel Mann, M.D. presents numerous case histories and extensive research that demonstrate the link between hypertension and repressed emotions.

One example is a woman who insisted that her ordinary stress level could not explain her uncontrolled hypertension. However, when she confronted for the first time the prolonged sexual abuse of her childhood, her blood pressure returned to normal. She remains medication-free.

"Understanding when hypertension is driven by unacknowledged sources of stress, and when it is not, provides a powerful new way to select optimal drug and non-drug therapies for every individual," said Dr. Mann, a physician and researcher at New York Presbyterian Hospital (New York-Cornell Campus). The book is available at bookstores everywhere or by calling 1-800-225-6945. Web site: www.healinghypertension.com.

DID YOU KNOW...

Smokers subject themselves to a much greater risk of death or disability at a younger age.

It is estimated that 87% of lung cancers are caused by smoking, causing about 150,000 deaths per year in the U.S.

Death rates from cancer of the esophagus, pharynx, larynx, and stomach are at least six times as great for smokers as for non-smokers. Death rates from heart disease are twice as high for smokers as for non-smokers - from peptic ulcers, nearly three times as high.

A tragically high number of people die in early middle age, when their children need them the most, from cigarette-related diseases.

Parents who care about their children should seriously consider quitting smoking.

SHARING A LAUGH with author David McCullough, right, in the Stone Library are C-SPAN host Brian Lamb, Caroline Kienath, chief of interpretations for the National Park Service, holding her six-week-old daughter Emma Katherine, Abigail Adams Mason Browne, a seventh generation Adams, and Marianne Peak, superintendent of the Adams National Historic Park. (Quincy Sun Photos/Tom Gorman)

Adams. Born in Quincy, then part of Braintree, on Oct. 30, 1735, Adams was educated at Harvard. A lawyer, he wrote the Massachusetts Constitution, much of which was incorporated into the Constitution of the United States. He was a delegate to the Continental Congress, a diplomat abroad and the first Vice President before becoming President in 1797.

McCullough said Simon & Schuster will publish his book, as yet untitled, within the next two years.

McCullough initially began his research for a book about Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, about their friendship, their rivalry and ultimately their renewed friendship, "a dual biography." "But once I began further reading and began writing, in my heart of hearts I wanted to write about John Adams," he said. "It came as a surprise. I thought Jefferson would be the star attraction, not for the reader, but for me."

McCullough continued: "John Adams was a man Dickens would have loved. He was a full character . . . He included you in his inner life in his writings, which none of the other founders [of the country] did. Jefferson destroyed all of his letters."

Fortunately, generations of the Adams family, including John, John Quincy Adams and his son, Charles Francis Adams, preserved their letters, diaries and other writings, and the entire collection was donated to the Massachusetts Historical Society in 1956. Today, the microfilmed collection of the Adams Papers is available in libraries at home and abroad, and the Harvard University is publishing a documentary edition which, to date, total 36 volumes.

McCullough, who was born in Pennsylvania, said he spends much of his time at the Massachusetts Historical Society conducting his research and only recently discovered at the New England Genealogical Society that part of his own ancestral family tree has roots in Hingham. Coincidentally, two sons, William and his wife Cissy and Geoffrey and his wife Signe, and his daughter Melissa and her husband John McDonald live in Hingham. Another son, David and his wife Janice, live in Hawaii, and another daughter, Dorie and her husband Tim Lawson live in Wyoming. McCullough and his wife, Rosalee, also have 13 grandchildren, including nine in Hingham.

In researching Adams' life McCullough and his wife plan to visit England next month to "follow the path of Thomas Jefferson and John Adams and tour the English gardens" they themselves had seen in April 1786.

"He was not a perfect man . . . he had flaws," McCullough said of Adams during the television interview with Lamb. "But he gave us one of America's greatest families."

McCullough said he treasured the Stone Library, which reflects Adams' world of books and ideas. "There's a great sense of continuity here, a rare devotion to place, not a common denominator among Americans."

"And everything is real here, the library, the house, and unlike any other place in America, it is the home of two Presidents," he said.

As an aside, McCullough noted that John Adams was the first President to live in the White House, then called the Executive Mansion. At the time it was unfurnished, the walls were bare and it was chilly.

John Adams' son, John Quincy Adams, served as the sixth President of the United States. The C-SPAN portrait of him will be filmed April 18 at the headquarters of the Massachusetts Historical Society at 1154 Boylston St., Boston.

That program will include an interview with Joseph Ellis, author of "Passionate Sage: The Character and Legacy of John Adams" and an encore C-SPAN Booknotes interview with C. Bradley Thompson, author of "John Adams and the Spirit of Liberty."

Monday's "American Portraits" program also included a brief interview with Abigail Adams Mason Browne of Boston and Beverly Farms, a seventh generation descendant of John Adams.

A self-described feminist "from the tips of her toes," she said her grandmother, Abigail Homans, imparted wisdom she tried to follow: "The Adams legacy is not something to live on but to live up to," she said.

Sitting in the Carriage House behind the Adams mansion which now serves as the site's administrative offices, Mrs. Browne said she always feels welcome here.

As a child, she said she remembers climbing the ladders in the Stone Library and running around its balcony and picnicking in the gardens.

"Although I never spent a night here, this feels like home," she said. Her grandparents had a home on Mount Wollaston, she said, and her grandmother at one time at a home at "The Glades," a summer compound at the northern tip of Scituate.

Asked about what it means to be an Adams, she said, "It means a connectedness to history, a privilege of saying what you believe, of thinking individually, of having a deep commitment to education and public service."

"I am very proud of being an Adams woman elected to public office," she said. She was a member of the Boston school committee from 1984 to 1992.

In conjunction with the series the C-SPAN's 45-foot-long, school bus-yellow television studio visited Quincy High School Friday.

Last week National Park

Service Ranger John Stanwich led C-SPAN staff through the Adams birthplaces on Franklin Street, the First Parish Unitarian Church and the both Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams and their wives, Abigail Smith Adams and Louisa Catherine Johnson Adams, are entombed.

That footage will be interspersed with portraits of both Adamesses' portraits, he said.

"This promotes the story of the Adams legacy and their public service and provides an opportunity to share the story with thousands and thousands," said Marianne Peak, superintendent of the Adams National Historic Site.

"The Stone Library, built in 1870 by Charles Francis Adams, grandson of John Adams and son of John Quincy Adams," is a remarkable structure. Really it's the first Presidential library.

"John Quincy Adams wrote in his letters that he wished for a building separate from the Old House to accommodate his collection," she said. "Books were a valued possession," she said.

Mindful of the dangers of fire, Edward Cabot designed the Gothic Revival library, employing brick and Quincy granite, she said.

Before the library was built, the books were stored everywhere in the Old House, she continued. Many of John Adams' books are housed in the Stone Library as well, she said. Others are housed in the Boston Public Library and the Boston Athenaeum.

In conjunction with the series the C-SPAN's 45-foot-long, school bus-yellow television studio visited Quincy High School Friday.

"Our main job in life is to educate," said Lamb after completing the televised segment. He said four of his staff suggested the Presidential portraits series in the off-election year. "With all the attention to the Presidency, we thought this would be a good time to look at the Presidents to better understand them."

Added Peak: "C-SPAN will promote the National Park Service's commitment to education

"It is our intention to reach out to the schools, working through their curriculum, to promote opportunities for school programs, both on-site and off-site, to introduce them to American history and the presidencies of John Adams and John Quincy Adams and, hopefully, motivate them to public service."

BIG RIDE BICYCLIST Dave stops to admire the picturesque Badlands in South Dakota enroute to Washington, D.C. from Seattle, Washington.

For Quincy's Dave Riley: Big Bicycle Ride A Life-Changing Venture

By DAVE RILEY

When I saw the ad for the GTE Big Ride Across America (June 15 to Aug. 1, 1998, from Seattle, Wash., to Washington, DC) in a mountain biking magazine, I thought that it was a great idea.

Riding my bicycle across the country to see America up-close and personal. Sure beats driving - you get to see more. These are the thoughts that buzzed through my head on that momentous day in late December of 1997.

I had no intention of doing it though, until I read further: it was to raise money for the American Lung Association. That hit home: my mother died of emphysema in June 1995, which is still the worse day in my life.

I felt an emotional pang that made me think about doing it.

One of the many emotions twirling through me as I read the ad was sadness. But then I thought, "I could do this for Mom." That uplifted my spirits, which became the catalyst for this life-changing venture.

I didn't think about what my mother would have thought because deep down I knew she would appreciate it.

After much self-exploration and discussions with others, I decided to do it.

DAVE RILEY of Quincy raised $7,500 for the American Lung Association by completing the Big Ride, a cross-country benefit ride from Seattle, Washington, to Washington, D.C. (Quincy Sun Photo/Tom Gorman)

Little did I know how much hard work the pledge drive would be. I created and regularly circulated a newsletter; organized a "Pledge Party"; juggled day-time items without interfering with work, and on and on. I even stopped watching TV, which I didn't do much anyway.

After all that work, I raised $8,000, some $2,000 more than the minimum of $6,000 to participate. With the fundraising requirement completed, I was now going to see the country on a 3,300-mile bicycle trek! The payoff was going to happen.

I got to see the country all right, through ups and downs of all kinds, whether riding the mountains of the Appalachians or riding my emotional and physical situation. I saw the South Dakota Badlands, 1880 Town, and even experienced snow on June 26, no less!

I stood near awe-inspiring Mount Rushmore, saw the world's largest six-pack (in Wisconsin, of course) and visited the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in Cleveland just to name a few things. I even came close to death at one point, what an eye-opening day that was!

As indicated earlier, this was a life-changing endeavor. What made it life changing, you wonder? Well for starters, I no longer work for the company I had been with for almost 10 years, among other things.

Also, I have a new found interest in getting involved with helping people, instead of thinking about it. I plan on being involved in similar causes.

Next year, I plan on participating in leukemia century (100 mile) rides because I have a close friend who is stricken with an incurable form of this disease. I will also be involved with next year's Big Ride somehow.

If my healthy life-style can be worth anything, it is to try to use it to help others by raising much needed funds for research and assistance for those who need it by riding my bicycle or participating in a swim event to help the cause. That is one of my goals for the future.

My participation in the Big Ride was an enjoyable adventure and I would like to share this with you. I am in pre-production of a CD-ROM with over 250 pictures and journal entries for each day of the Ride.

This is taking some time to complete. If you would like a copy, please either e-mail or call me. Once close to completion, I'll have a better idea how much it will cost. I will keep costs down so that I could donate as much as I can of the proceeds to the American Lung Association.

For those who long to take such an adventurous trip, have the time and are willing to work for the pledge drive, wouldn't you like to join Big Ride 99? (I certainly would love to do this again). Please contact me at 617-328-5256 or e-mail DRSWIMS@email.msn.com

John Daggert Wins Boxing Tourney

Fourteen-year-old John Daggert of Quincy won a unanimous third-round decision over David Ragginburg of Beverly in the 90-pound class at the 43rd annual Silver Mittens Boxing Tournament held recently at the Double Tree Inn, Lowell.

With his win, Daggert became a two-time Silver Mitten champ. His overall record is 13 wins and 1 loss.

SCOTT DEWARE

A Thought For The Week

So much of what we hear about somebody is usually exaggerated. To repeat is only adds further exaggeration. Mark Twain once said that "A lie can travel around the world while the truth is still lacing up its boots."

A wit once wise-cracked, "Nothing is opened more by malice than the mouth." It was meant in jest but it is also has a serious meaning. For instance, can anyone honestly say he has never said the wrong thing at the wrong time? Hardly. When a hot-pass like that happens, one regrets it...

An outthinking slip of the tongue can happen to anyone. It is understandable. However, an outright lie - especially an untrue or unconfirmed rumor spoken behind the back of some one... is not a slip of the tongue. Malicious gossip can malign, tragically talent or ruin a person's reputation and it is inexcusable.

We especially like this quote that is attributed to Dr. Henry Van Dyke "... Never believe anything bad about anybody unless you positively know it is true; never tell even that, unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary and that God is listening while you tell it."

Events Include New Habitat Development Dedication

City To Observe CDBG Week March 29-April 4

Several events celebrating the 25th anniversary of the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program will be held during National Community Development Week March 29 through April 4, announces Mayor James Sheets.

All events are free and open to the public, except where noted.

Since 1975, the CDBG program has provided more than $50 million to the City of Quincy for housing rehabilitation, first-time homebuyer financing, public facility improvements, economic development, public service delivery, handicap accessibility, affordable housing development, streets, sidewalks, park and playground improvements.

The CDBG program is administered locally by the City of Quincy Department of Planning and Community Development.

CDBG week will commence with a ribbon cutting ceremony Monday, March 29 at 9:30 a.m. at 90 Bower Rd., site of the South Shore Habitat for Humanity's 10-unit housing development for very low-income families. The project is Habitat's largest in the New England region.

Three single, detached units have been completed and occupied by families who have realized the dream of home ownership. The Bower Road site, donated by Atlantic Development Corporation, has utilized $163,000 in CDBG/HOME funds and $115,000 of HUD's Housing Opportunities Program funds.

Also on March 29, at 11 a.m., five units of supportive housing will be dedicated at 26 Morton St. The newly constructed building provides group housing to Department of Mental Retardation (DMR) clients requiring round-the-clock skilled care.

The DMR project, which utilized $175,000 CDBG/HOME funds, leveraged $400,000 from state and private sources.

Following the Morton Street dedication, a luncheon reception will be held at the Adams Heights Men's Club, 63 Bower Rd. At this reception, Sheets will proclaim March 29 - April 4 National Community Development Week in Quincy.

The luncheon is by invitation only.

On Tuesday, March 30, the Atlantic Neighborhood Center will host an open house from 3 to 5 p.m. at 11 Hayward St. featuring an "Oak Tree Quilting Project."

The Mayor's Fair Housing Commission will hold an exhibit and award ceremony at City Hall for its calendar art contest, beginning at 4 p.m. Selected posters will be included in a commemorative calendar. The ceremony is by invitation only.

Several events are scheduled on Wednesday, March 31:

• At 10:30 a.m., the Quantum Community Center, 136 Standish Rd.,

will host a Senior Art Exhibit and Aerobics Demonstration.

• The Ward 2 Community Center, 14 Nevada Rd., will open its Tot Time, Line Dancing and Youth Dance Class beginning at 11 a.m.

• The Houghs Neck Community Center welcomes the public to a senior luncheon, bingo and arts and crafts, starting at 11:30 a.m.

• Beechwood on the Bay, 440 East Squantum St., will hold its First Aide for Seniors seminar from 2 to 4 p.m.

On Thursday, April 1, Beechwood on the Bay hosts Intergenerational Exercise and Senior Luncheon from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

On Friday, April 2, the Asian American Service Association, 550 Hancock St., will hold its beginner Tai Chi and Sing-Along, beginning at 10 a.m.

For five weeks, beginning March 29, City Hall will host an exhibit of poster boards depicting the various agencies and projects funded by HUD, CDBG, HOME, Emergency Shelter Grant and McKinney Homeless programs. The display includes Quincy 2000, Quincy Neighborhood Housing Services, Quincy Community Action Program, Office of Housing Rehabilitation, Public Service Providers, Flood Retrofitting, Public Facility Improvements, Public Works and Handicap Accessibility.

South Shore, 9 Other Chambers Sign Energy Buying Pact

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce and 10 other chambers in Eastern Massachusetts have reached an exclusive agreement to provide their members with low cost electricity, natural gas, and energy efficiency.

The agreement was negotiated with National Energy Choice, a Boston-based energy services firm, which will oversee the marketing and execution of this unique arrangement.

The South Shore Chamber spearheaded the formation of the Massachusetts Chamber collaborative, a coalition of chambers of commerce representing more than 11,000 members in 115 cities and towns. These combined chambers represent the largest Massachusetts business group, and one of the largest groups in the nation, to sign up for a competitive energy program to date.

"When Massachusetts began the move a year ago from a heavily regulated marketplace for power toward a more competitive market, we realized that there was an opportunity to lower operational costs for our members," said Ronald E. Zooleck, President and CEO of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, who also serves as president of the collaborative. "The combined buying power of Chamber members gives small and mid-sized businesses a clout in the marketplace they could never have individually."

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce was joined by other chambers: Cape Cod, The Cape Cod Canal Region, Fall River, Metro West, Metro South, Neponset Valley, New Bedford Area, Plymouth Area, United (Franklin) Chamber, and the Alliance for Amesbury.

Working together as a collaborative, the business organizations conducted an extensive screening process to find the energy partner that could present the best opportunity for savings to our members. That process has reached its conclusion with the selection of National Energy Choice.

National Energy Choice will act as an aggregator to provide services such as electricity cost-savings to the Massachusetts Chambers Collaborative member. The Collaborative and National Energy Choice will jointly market these services to member businesses.

"This groundbreaking agreement has the potential to provide enormous savings through a host of services being offered to members of the Collaborative," said Stephen J. Remen, managing director of National Energy Choice. "Along with lower electricity bills, we look forward to working with Collaborative members to lower their natural gas bills, improve energy efficiency, and provide advanced bill auditing and informational services."

The National Energy Choice program being offered to the Collaborative reduces the cost of energy supply by taking advantage of the combined buying power of Chamber members. NEC will aggregate members and shop for reliable, low cost energy. Under this program, a business consuming most of its energy at night can balance off the energy consumption of a daytime business.

National Energy Choice earns a fee by sharing a percentage of the savings it obtains for customers. Because of this arrangement, National Energy's Choice's sole incentive is to save Chamber members as much money as possible.

National Energy Choice is a program of NEChoice,

L.L.C., an aggregation company headquartered in Boston with offices in Oakland, CA. National Energy Choice works solely on behalf of its customers and is not exclusively affiliated with any utility or power supplier. Led by industry experts Paul J. Barrett, Stephen J. Remen, and Steven M. Rothstein, and CEO John Giesser, the company currently represents one of the largest pools of energy users in the country. National Energy Choice manages energy bills for a wide range of clients, such as theaters, hotels, municipalities, nursing homes, manufacturers, and retail chains. For more information, call 1-888-722-WATT or visit National Energy's web site at "www.NEChoice.com".

CRITIC'S CORNER

SIMPLE IRRESISTIBLE: In this contemporary love story set against the backdrop of Manhattan's high-end culinary and retail worlds, Sarah Michelle Gellar plays a chef whose emotions have somehow become a magical ingredient in her cooking. Her mystical "recipes" make a high-powered executive (Sean Patrick Flannery) with whom she has fallen in love — until he begins to suspect her of having supernatural powers. Also starring Betty Buckley, Patricia Clarkson and Dylan Baker, this is a rather humdrum flick, despite sounding somewhat intriguing. Gellar's talents are wasted here, despite her every effort to rise above the material.

FORCES OF NATURE: Ben (Ben Affleck) has two days to get from New York to Savannah for his wedding to Bridget. How hard can that be in this age of planes, trains and automobiles? When his plane goes skidding into Flushing Bay, Ben saves the life of his soon-to-be fiancée, an eccentric young woman named Sarah (Sandra Bullock). In return, she becomes his faithful traveling companion — whether he likes it or not — and it's all downhill from there as the two head south. Panic doesn't really set in until Ben realizes that he's developing a definite attraction to the sexy and impetuous Sarah... and the feeling is decidedly mutual. It seems that man, machine and the forces of nature are conspiring to keep Ben from his vows, leaving him to wonder if this is some kind of cosmic test... and if it is, will he pass? Also starring Maurya Treacy, Steve Zahn, Blythe Danner and Remy Cam, this is a wonderful flick. Don't miss it.

New Options For Medicare Beneficiaries

By LAURIE ZASTROW

Beginning this year, Medicare beneficiaries will be able to choose from a variety of options for receiving health care. These options will complement the Original Medicare Plan and make health care choices for Medicare beneficiaries similar to those available to individuals not in Medicare.

One of the new health plan options might be right for you, but the choice is entirely yours. If you are happy with the way you get health care now, you don't have to do anything. If you choose to do nothing, you will continue to receive your Medicare health care in the same way you always have. (Note: Only a small number of people, who will receive specific notices from their current health plan choice, will be required to make a change, and most of this group will have a similar option available.)

Beginning this year, you can choose between the Original Medicare Plan, which has not changed, the Original Medicare Plan plus a supplemental insurance policy, commonly known as "Medigap," and a number of managed care plans (such as Health Maintenance Organizations or HMOs). In the future, depending on where you live, additional managed care plans and other options may become available such as Preferred Provider Organizations, Private Fee-for-Service Plans, Medicare Savings Accounts and Religious Fraternal Benefit Society Plans.

Managed care plans differ in cost, benefits offered, and choices of doctors, hospitals and other health care providers. However, each managed care plan provides all Medicare covered services. (Laurie Zastrow is Social Security manager in Quincy.)

Ward 4 Trash Collection Meeting March 29

Ward 4 Councillor Michael D'Amico has scheduled a neighborhood meeting at 7 p.m. Monday, March 29, at the Ward 4 Community Center, 100 Brooks Ave., with officials from Browning Ferris Industries (BFI) in an effort to resolve several complaints.

According to D'Amico, he has received numerous complaints from residents on Nightingale Avenue about the business's hours of operation.

Although the city ordinance specifies that business operations cannot begin before 7 a.m., the residents claimed that some trucks have begun pickups as early as 5 a.m.

The residents aired their complaints at a License Board hearing last week, and the hearing was continued until March 30.

BFI officials at the hearing included Robert Costigan, facility manager, Steve Benton, marketing vice president, and Maryanne Cotton, community affairs director.

Costigan told the licensing board that Quincy Hospital had specifically asked for an early pickup and added that it is safer to dispatch trucks early in the day before traffic becomes heavy.

Other residents charged that BFI had not yet landscaped its parking lot nor had fencing been erected or trees planted along Intervale Street and Brooks Avenue. They also said they wanted graffiti removed from BFI's terminal.

Fire Chief Thomas Gorman suggested that BFI not allow its trucks to leave their yard before 6 a.m., but Police Chief Thomas Frane said the license board could make no exception.

City Clerk Joe Shea suggested that the city councilors could change the ordinance.

D'Amico said he would summarize the discussion of the neighborhood meeting and report back to the license board March 30.

*Placed on file a hearing from 7-Eleven Convenience Store at 75 Copeland St. because of complaints regarding hours of deliveries. Atty. Peter Eeley assured the board that all deliveries would be made after 7 a.m. and none after 5 or 6 p.m.

*Continued a hearing from Media One, 81 School St. for permission to install power supplies between the hours of 12

Ayers, Tobin, Mariano See Need Despite Defeat Local Reps. Back Death Penalty

By MARILYN JACKSON

Quincy's legislative delegation stood strong in support of reinstituting the death penalty, but after a six-hour debate Monday, the Legislature voted 80-73 against it.

Rep. A. Stephen Tobin, Rep. Bruce Ayers and Rep. Ronald Mariano, along with their South Shore counterparts — Rep. Paul Haley, D-Weymouth, Rep. Walter Timilty, D-Milton, Rep. James Sullivan, D-Braintree and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset — all opposed accepting the report of the Committee on Criminal Justice which stated that a death penalty bill ought not to pass.

Tobin, who is House chairman of the committee, said he would have voted for the governor's bill, had it been brought to the floor.

"I believe there is a need to have capital punishment as the only appropriate punishment for certain crimes against society," Tobin said. "It only applies where a defendant is convicted of first degree murder and a jury unanimously finds, notwithstanding all mitigating circumstances raised at sentencing, that the death penalty should be applied."

Tobin said he took issue with statements that the death penalty would be considered under numerous circumstances. "It would come up only a few times, if that."

"I think the people of Massachusetts have said the penalty would be applied in those rare occasions where the conduct is so shocking that we want the death penalty, and we have crafted something that meets constitutional guidelines and due process which could be administered so fairly that, for all practical purposes, there is no risk to those subject to the death penalty."

"I think this bill does that," said Tobin.

"It's only a matter of time," he said before a death penalty is reinstituted.

A Mother Supports 'The Kids' Window Candles Glow For U.S. NATO Forces

By now most everyone has put away the Christmas holiday decorations, but Gigi Thompson has unpacked a white window candle to shine in the window of her home, a big yellow house at the corner of Quarry Street and Furnace Brook Parkway.

"She wants to show a sign of support for the American troops who are engaged in the NATO air strikes in Yugoslavia."

"It's the big house on the corner with the American flag and the Marine Corps flag," said Thompson. "You can't miss it."

Mrs. Thompson, along with her neighbors — Carol Federico, Mary Burton and Theresa Kelly, who also live on Quarry Street, and Mary and Eddie Ryan and Michael and Kelly Kennedy, who live on Grogan Street, have joined in showing their support by placing candles in their windows too.

It's part of a support effort called Operation Support Our Soldiers, which has a website — <http://www.opsos.org/candles> — and is encouraging Americans throughout the country to shine a candle in their window.

"I want to show my support for the men and women in the service. It's not a political statement. I want to support the kids; I want the people in the United States to support them," said Thompson.

She is the mother of Michael Thompson, a 1996 graduate of Quincy High School, who is serving as a corporal in the U.S. Marine Corps in the Second Marine Division at Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Fatal Blast Investigated

Investigators Wednesday (yesterday) were continuing to try to determine the cause of death in a fatal blast at a Wollaston home which claimed the life of Chawki Ibrahim, 59, of 93 Standish Ave.

Homicide has not been ruled out, according to Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating.

State Troopers assigned to Keating's office were working with Quincy police, agents from the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms as well as State Police from the state fire marshal's office and the state police bomb squad to determine what caused the mysterious explosion.

Trace evidence from the cellar of the single-family, wood-frame house was collected and sent to the State Police laboratory in Sudbury to ascertain the origin of the explosion, said David

Agreement Reached On Later Trash Pick-Up

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO
For the first time in many years, Browning, Ferris Industries, (BFI) on 22 Nightingale Ave. in South Quincy will not leave their premises at 5 a.m., but at 6:15 a.m. following constant complaints from neighbors.

Speaking at the License Board meeting Tuesday, Ward 4 Councillor Michael D'Amico told the board that a meeting with the neighborhood was held Monday in which it was agreed to be a fair time.

D'Amico calling the 5 a.m. start a "hardship" and one "practiced for many years because of a city ordinance".

The ordinance states that no machinery shall operate before the hour of 7 a.m. without a permit obtained from the chief of police.

Police Chief Thomas Frane said as long as the trucks "leave as quietly as possible" he had no objection to the 6:15 start.

D'Amico said the later start in the morning would not coincide with persons "going to work or children going to school."

Chairman Joseph Shea said the city also wants BFI to finish their work by 3:30 p.m.

Robert Costigan, representing BFI said an additional crew had been hired to abide by the afternoon hours.

D'Amico said in addition to the trucks leaving that early in the morning, there was also noise from dumpsters and work being done in the yard.

D'Amico said another meeting will be held with the neighbors and BFI regarding landscaping and parking plans and the increase of the number of trucks from 50 to 65.

He said he would also like a representative from BFI once a week to pick up debris throughout the city fallen in the course of the week.

He will report back to the license board at the May 4 meeting.

"Ever since he was a little kid, he wanted to be a Marine," said his mother. He was a member of ROTC at Quincy High, and the day after the scheduled graduation, he left home to begin basic training.

She said she learned of the Candles Across America campaign through an organization called Marine Moms Across America.

"I bought a computer so I could stay in touch with my son," said Thompson, adding that he is her only child. "When he was on board the USS Guam, that was the only way I could stay in touch with him. I was so computer illiterate."

She said he was home in November on a 96-hour leave and was one of the color guard in the Veterans' Day observances held at Quincy Vo-Tech School.

"I'm fortunate he's state-side," she added. "He started in the infantry; now he's a coach on the rifle range and qualifies all the officers."

Thompson, who works at the Walgreen's store on Adams Street in West Quincy, told her boss, John Foley, what she was doing. Foley, who is district manager of dozens of Walgreen's throughout Massachusetts, sent an E-mail to all of his stores, asking them to put up a display and encourage people to place candles in their homes.

"I was surprised he did that, but Walgreen's is pretty good to our military."

She said the Candles Across America effort has "caught fire." Last week, when she looked at a map of the United States on the website, there were three dots showing where candles were lit. A few days later, the map was covered with dots. You couldn't see a white space, she said.

The 54th anniversary ceremonies were conducted by the William R. Caddy Marine Corps League Detachment named for him. Paying tribute here are his sister, Mrs. Beatrice Beuan, Detachment Commander Leo Cardarelli, Mayor James Sheets and Chaplain William Wright.

Alicia Corea: A Special Milestone

Alicia Corea doesn't think of herself as a pioneer. But she certainly blazed a major trail for other women to follow a half-century ago when she was ordained to the ministry:

The first woman in Quincy and one of the very first in the state--if not the first--to be ordained. And, the first woman to become pastor of a Quincy church.

Formally, she is the Rev. M. (for Mina) Corea, co-pastor of Houghs Neck Congregational Church with her husband, formally the Rev. Dr. Peter V. Corea.

But to their congregation, friends and the community, it is just plain Peter and Alicia. That's the way it has been through the years. And, that's the way they like it.

Together, their service at Houghs Neck adds up to over a century--52 years for him and 50 for her. A unique and historic ministry with another "first": the first husband and wife team ministry. And, on top of that, they have served one church longer than any other pastors in Quincy.

(Only one clergyman has served a house of worship longer: Rabbi Jacob Mann is now in his 57th year as spiritual leader of Beth Israel Synagogue.)

Peter was ordained in the sanctuary Dec. 8, 1947 after being called to be pastor.

Alicia was studying at Andover Newton Theological School during their first two years at the church. She was ordained in the same sanctuary May 5, 1949 and became co-pastor. They have been married since June 1, 1946.

Alicia will celebrate the 50th anniversary of her ordination Sunday, May 2 at a 10 a.m. worship service at the church, followed by a Fellowship Dinner at 12:30 p.m. at the Lantana in Randolph.

She was the only woman in her class at Andover Theological School studying for the ministry in the early 1940s.

No surprise, there were not only frowns but outright opposition when she was to be ordained. The ministry back then, was considered man's work and, as a woman, well she was intruding in a man's world.

When the Suffolk South Association Ecclesiastical Council met to vote on the matter, two clergy members from Quincy stood opposed.

One of them was Rev. Bedros Baharian of Quincy Point Congregational Church. Peter and Alicia smile now when they look back on it because they and Baharian became good friends.

At Alicia's 25th anniversary celebration, Baharian congratulated her and publicly stated he was wrong to oppose her ordination.

"I have never let Bedros forget it," laughs Peter.

He recalls some years later emceeing a testimonial

PETER and ALICIA COREA

to Baharian and telling those in attendance: "You know, he opposed my wife's ordination.

"And," laughs Peter a little harder, "I said it right there in his own church."

Volunteers, including Joan Kirby, dianconate chairwoman, and Gloria Brummitt, church clerk, have mailed out something like 500 invitations for May 2. And with them a letter from the latter that says in part:

"Please understand that the only gifts or remembrances which we and the committee want from you is your continued friendship and affection.

"Therefore, please come as our invited guests. Just come as nice as you always are. We want you to join us all on this most happy occasion which will be most delightful because you are there."

No gifts. That's typical Peter and Alicia. They've always given rather than receive.

Among those planning to attend is Marion Taylor who was a lay member of that Ecclesiastical Council. She proudly voted for Alicia.

The Corea's son, William, is a senior geologist for Chevron Overseas Petroleum and lives in San Ramon, Calif. You might say he partly followed in his parent's footsteps. He is an Elder in a Presbyterian church there.

"We had a large number of volunteer babysitters when he was born in 1952," Alicia remembers.

Three members of the Houghs Neck church congregation--with the encouragement and help of Peter and Alicia through scholarships--went into the ministry: Rev. Malcolm Brummitt, retired Army chaplain; Rev. Dr. Richard Anderson, minister First Christian Congregational Church in Swansea and the late Rev. Robert Johnston, headmaster of the Woodward School. And they have helped others through college.

Houghs Neck Congregational Church was founded in 1894 as a community church by summer residents. That was when Houghs Neck was a main summer resort area and people came from Boston by boat and trolley. It is still a community church with those of various denominations attending services.

The Coreas live in the church parsonage next door but have served the congregation free. They have not drawn a salary in something like 35 years. Ever since the early 1960s they have lived on Peter's salary as a teacher at Emerson College and Boston University.

Alicia shrugs that off. "That's no big deal," she says. "A lot of people here at the church give freely of their time."

Looking back on a half-century, Alicia says: "Wow, Those years really flew by. They have been great years.

"Houghs Neck is a wonderful place. As a peninsula, it is a close-knit community. The people are fantastic. Very supportive."

Alicia was born in Ashland, ME. She started out with a degree in journalism at the University of Maine but then received a Danforth Fellowship at the University of Nebraska to study religion.

Houghs Neck is happy that she chose God over newspaper work.

But now, at 77, she does have some news. Good news.

"No," she says, "I have no thoughts of retiring. I know that day will come sometime but I am not looking forward to it.

"Maybe," smiles Peter, "We'll try for the 75th."

But right now Alicia is concentrating on the 50th.

A special milestone for a special lady.

Road to Squantum Head, Squantum, Mass.

THIS IS A POSTCARD view of the road to Squantum Head as it appeared 90 years ago. This is now Dorchester Street. The stanchions along the right side of the road held the power line for the trolleys that ran here from the Atlantic railroad depot. On the right is the old Squantum Inn near what is now Bellevue Road. Popular resort hotels were located at the head of Squantum from the mid-19th century until this Inn closed in the 1920s. The Inn became the home of one of Boston's first radio stations until it was torn down in 1943.

Thank You, Quincy Hospital

Editor, The Quincy Sun:
On Feb. 2, a medical crisis took my wife, Jean, to Quincy Hospital and she died there on March 15.
During that six-week period she was the recipient of expert and loving care from the doctors, nurses, chaplains and aides. I particularly appreciate the work of her surgical team in trying to solve her multiple medical problems--Dr. Dragone, Dr. Divinagracia, Dr. Helfrich and Dr. Garcia--and her primary care physician, Dr. George Gales, who has overseen her care for many years.

The nurses in the Intensive Care Unit are second to none. Jean was in Intensive Care for the last month and the nurses gave her expert and compassionate care. They were also cognizant of the emotional pain of her family.

The chaplains, Rev. Esther Starkey and Rev. Anne Rearick, as well as volunteer, Dr. Sidney Cutler, gave Jean (and her family) spiritual and emotional support.

Thank you, Quincy Hospital.

Teacher Aspirations And What They Deserve

Editor, The Quincy Sun:
My eight-year-old daughter wants to be a teacher when she grows up.
It started in kindergarten when she spent a year with a teacher who would greet her with a hug, visit her at home when she was sick, and made her feel comfortable and relaxed in a stimulating learning environment. In the first grade she fell in love with her teacher, a young, vibrant woman who, despite it being her first year of teaching, masterfully created a classroom that not only taught them how to read and print, but also taught these students how to enjoy it.

It was this year, in second grade, that my daughter decided firmly that no other occupation would bring her the satisfaction and nobility that the teaching profession would. Her second grade teacher has taught her about math and science and geography, but also has given my daughter and her classmates an education in self-esteem, self-confidence, and how to respect one another and our environment. She has given them an education in how a teacher cares for and nurtures children to enable them to grow to be responsible, healthy and happy adults. She's the reason my daughter wants to be a teacher when she grows up.

Unfortunately, as a parent, I need to prepare her for the realities of this world in which teachers are underpaid, overworked and not put on pedestals in society, (as they are in our home). She needs to know that if she chooses to work in the city in which she grew, she will be paid less than if she chooses to go to a neighboring city or town. Her starting salary will be $1,235 below the average in Massachusetts, falling in the bottom third of the state. She lives in a city that spends only 32% of its budget on educating its children, disgraceful when compared with the average in our state (50%). (Milton spend 47% on education, Weymouth, 51.8% and Braintree, 51.2%.)

The people of Quincy, both with school age children and without, need to help our children's teachers get the salary and benefits that they deserve. If they don't, the chances of my daughter, and many other girls and boys, of realizing their dreams of becoming teachers in this city will be at risk. Please, Mayor Sheets, take another look at this from our children's perspective and give our teachers what they rightfully deserve.

How Dare Massport

Editor, The Quincy Sun,
Massport's own environmental reports confirm one salient fact: the airport in general and the big jets in particular are this area's largest source of airborne Volatile Organic Compounds (which include toluene, acetone, benzene and phenol), Nitrogen Oxides, and Carbon Monoxide.

Moreover, the Authority reports point out that current airport/airplane emissions can run up to nearly 80 percent of allowable levels, and sometimes greatly exceed state one-hour standards. The same reports also allow that airport operations are one of this Commonwealth's leading producers of toxic photochemical oxidants, and that the state itself is in "serious nonattainment" with respect to federal standards.

So what does that authority plan to do about this?

Reportedly, it plans to roll out an ad campaign niggling about public flying inconveniences in order to stampede disgruntled Logan customers into supporting plans for airport expansion. This media campaign may well become a case study on gross institutional insensitivity. How dare Massport even begin to play up simple inconveniences when the focus and money--said to be nearly a quarter million--clearly ought to be budgeted towards studying and resolving serious issues of public health and occasioned by Logan generated contaminants.

Comics Banned Here Removed From Stores

By PAUL HAROLD

Twenty-additional objectionable crime comic magazines and pocket size reprints were removed from all stores in the city by the distributor, the New England News Company.

This brought to 81 the number of publications banned in the city by the Quincy Library Review Committee. The distributor who has been working cooperatively with the review committee said that all future orders for those publications would be stricken from local dealers' accounts.

In its latest ruling the review committee noted, "The crime comic magazines served more or less as a blueprint to juvenile delinquency that all crime but comic in name only." Among the magazine titles banned were, "Gangsters Can't Win," "Outlaws" and "Western True Crimes."

PYRAMID TREASURY DONATED

The amount of $947 was given to the Quincy Community Chest as its Adams Building office by Mary Patterson, owner of Bobbie's Beauty in Cottage Ave., where a major pyramid club operated.

The donation represented the remaining monies in the club's treasury. Mrs. Patterson decided to donate the money when she realized that they pyramid had grown to mammoth proportions and would be unable to pay off more than one of its 2000 members. Meanwhile, pyramid clubs throughout New England were crumbling.

COSTS HALT INCINERATOR CONSTRUCTION

Mayor Charles Ross said that the city would postpone construction of an incinerator for one year because of the city's financial condition.

The city's commitment to school expansion and the $250,000 it appropriated for the health center precluded any further capital expenditures. The estimated cost for the incinerator, expected to meet the city's needs for 15-20 years, was $750,000.

Marie's Kitchen

BY MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Pasta & Peas

One of our favorite dishes when we were growing up was pasta and peas. In Italian it was called pasta-pizzella.

Since then, there have been many varied ways to make this delicious dish. My mother used to use ditalis, a small sort of square pasta. I do it that way most of the time. But today's recipe is almost like it with a few additions, and can not only be enjoyed during the Lenten season, but anytime. And so easy!

Angel Hair & Peas
3/4 pound angel hair
2 cups tomato sauce
1 cup frozen peas
3/4 cup reduced fat sour cream grated parmesan or romano cheese

salt and pepper to taste

While the pasta is cooking, boil the sauce, add the peas and simmer for a couple of minutes. Then add the sour cream. Pour it over the pasta and sprinkle with grated cheese. (I sometimes use spaghetti instead of angel hair.)

(Marie D'Olimpio has written a cookbook containing recipes printed in The Quincy Sun.)

It is available at the Fruit Basket (near Star Market), Previte's Market on Summer Street, Nanci's Barbershop, Elm Street, Braintree, the Cherry Gift Shop at Quincy Hospital, and Curry's Hardware on Copeland Street.)

Inhalants: What Parents Should Know

We carefully label and safely store many household products that are harmful or fatal if swallowed. But what about the hundreds of products - glue, paint, lighter fluid, finger-nail polish, permanent markers, and anything in aerosol cans - that young people can sniff to get a rapid, dangerous "high"? It's easy to buy or find inhalants, and abuse is one the increase.

An inhalant "high" gives a feeling of well-being and reduces inhibitions, much like the effects of alcohol and other sedatives. Larger doses produce laughter and giddiness, feeling of floating, time and space distortion, and hallucinations.

SOME SIGNS OF INHALANT ABUSE:

- Slow speech
- Disorientation
- Spots of sores around the mouth
- Headaches and nausea
- A general drunken appearance

MAKE NO MISTAKE - INHALANTS CAN KILL

Some people die from heart failure or suffocation the first time they sniff to get high. Chronic abuse can cause severe, permanent brain damage.

Other side effects include breathing problems, heart palpitations, muscle weakness, abnormalities in liver and kidney function, chromosome damage, loss of appetite and weight, and impaired judgement that can lead to confusion, panic, and violent behavior.

"Sniffing" is frequently the first step to such drugs as crack and heroin.

Where Age Old Wisdom Meets Innovative Skin Care Technology

Foot & Notes

by Dr. Richard A. Hacker
Surgeon-Podiatrist

PODIATRIC ARTHROSCOPY

Many people associate arthroscopy (also called endoscopy) with knee surgery. This minimally invasive technique has all but eliminated open leg surgeries for a number of knee problems. Good news: minimal incision surgery is also possible for many podiatric problems.

The tiny instrument, requiring an incision a half-inch or less, is now used, on qualified candidates, for diagnostics, joint repair, some bone fusions, and plantar fascia release. For many of the procedures, only local anesthesia is required, little or no post-operative casting is required, and patients walk out of surgery wearing appropriate footwear. Healing time is drastically reduced, as is the likelihood of muscle weakness and wasting, common after lengthy recuperation and immobilization following open foot surgery.

If foot surgery has been recommended to you or a member of your family, you may wish to have a second opinion. In fact, many insurance companies require this. Our office will be happy to provide this for you. For a first or second opinion, we're here at 110 West Squantum St., No. Quincy. In fact, we're here to help with any and all of your foot concerns, from preventive care to medical and surgical treatment. For family foot care, please call 617-472-3466 for an appointment.

P.S. The arthroscope utilizes a fiber optic system to relay visual images, enabling the doctor to see what he or she is doing inside the body on a monitor without opening up a broad surgical field.

'Week Of The Child' Activities Begin April 12

Mayor James Sheets will officially kick off the festivities for April 12 Week of the Young Child at the Snug Harbor-Head Start.

At 9:30 a.m., the mayor will greet parents, children, and teachers for a continental breakfast, story time and music program. Invited guests will see firsthand how high-quality early childhood services are meeting the needs of young children and their families in our community.

This year's Week of the Young Child theme, "The Early Years are Learning Years....Make Them Count!" is a reminder that early childhood lays the foundation for all later learning and shapes whether children succeed in school and later life. The Week of the Young

Child is a time to reflect on how well children's experience in Quincy are preparing them to take full advantage of their educational opportunities and to become effective citizens, capable workers, and loving parents of the next generation and to develop specific strategies for improving the quality of life for young children in our community.

Other activities through the Week, sponsored locally by the Quincy Coalition for Children & Families will include:

Parent Workshops, Children's Activities and Family events.

All event details are listed in a Calendar of Events available at all public schools, private day care centers, preschool programs and children services organizations.

Bishop Shaw Appoints Rev. Claude Smith At St. Chrysostom's

Rt. Rev. M. Thomas Shaw, Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Massachusetts made his first visit to St. Chrysostom's parish Palm Sunday and announced the appointment of Rev. Claude Smith as Priest in Charge.

The Bishop also announced his endorsement of the Team Ministry Plan for the parish.

Rev. Smith has served as priest at St. Chrysostom's the past year during which he led the effort to evaluate the church's future following Rev. Richard Murphy's calling to serve as rector of a parish in New Mexico.

The Team Ministry Plan will create a ministry team of clergy and laity to serve the needs of the Parish. This Team Ministry approach is experimental in nature and partially funded through a Parish Partnership Program grant provided by the Episcopal City Mission and the Episcopal Diocese.

A native of Boston, Rev. Smith has been involved in parish ministry for over 40 years, while working consecutively as senior employee relations officer of a Fortune 500 company and as executive officer of one of the nation's largest private foundations. Currently, in addition to his work at St. Chrysostom's he serves as an adjunct faculty member of Seabury Western Theological Seminary's program in advanced studies in congregational development.

Smith, a graduate of Princeton University, received his theological education at Yale University Divinity School and the Episcopal Divinity School (Cambridge, MA). He also holds a Ph.D in Religion and Society from Harvard University and has completed the Advanced Management Program at Harvard Business School. Together with his wife, Elizabeth, a professional musician, lives in Norwell.

In appreciation of Bishop Shaw's visit to St. Chrysostom's the music director, Nancy Conrad, working with the Church Choir composed a hymn entitled "One God, Creator" dedicated to him.

BISHOP THOMAS SHAW made his first visit to St. Chrysostom's Church on Palm Sunday and announced the appointment of Rev. Claude Smith as Priest in Charge. From the left are Elaine Martell, church clerk; Ron Jacobucci, senior warden; Bishop Shaw, Rev. Smith, Cathy Chubbuck, treasurer and Walter Crow, junior warden.

Quincy Teachers: 213 days without a contract

Did you know?

Quincy's teachers have been saying that we would like to be paid as our colleagues are in the area.

For example, our Braintree colleagues settled a contract for three years. Comparing their settlement with the School Committee's offer, see how the "base pay gap" would widen in the chart at right:

Quincy	Braintree
1st year teacher	1997 diff. = $859
diff. worsens	1998-9 = $1276
diff. worsens	1999-00 = $1576
diff. worsens	2000-01 = $1671

As you can see, the "gap" widens.

Quincy	Braintree
Master's Degree + 30 credits Max.	1997 diff. = $3869
diff. worsens	1998-9 = $4787
diff. worsens	1999-00 = $5522
diff. worsens	2000-01 = $5766

As you can see, the "gap" widens.

Teachers in Quincy work just as hard as our colleagues do. We are not being unreasonable. We want to reach agreement with the City. We'd like to see Quincy's school and Quincy's teacher salaries heading in the right direction. Help us!

We're asking Quincy to pay its teachers the going rate.

A NEW VAN is being sponsored by State Rep. Ward 6 City Councillor Bruce Ayers to pick up and deliver medical equipment donated in the Quincy Helping Hand Program. Ayers (right) is shown here with Albert Moussab, of North Quincy, the first person to receive the free medical equipment via the new delivery van.

Ayers Sponsors New Van For Helping Hand Program

State Rep. and Ward 6 City Councillor Bruce Ayers has dedicated a new transportation van that will be used to pick-up and deliver medical equipment donated under the Quincy Helping Hand Program.

Several years ago, Ayers developed this program to ensure that people would have free access to costly medical equipment like wheelchairs, hospital beds, commodes, walkers, orthopedic canes, crutches and tub benches.

The Helping Hand Program is a community effort that relies on donations from area residents, free storage space at Ayers Handicap Conversion Center and volunteer help to clean, repair and inventory medical equipment. Ayers maintains a drop-off and pick up service at his North Quincy business where people can donate equipment no longer needed and can request any item they need for the maintenance of an active and independent lifestyle.

"The addition of a van for pick and drop-off will help extend this important assistance to those who don't have the transportation to leave their home," Ayers said. "I hope this service will result in more donations and more people receiving the equipment they require to have a comfortable lifestyle."

To help make sure those in need of this service, a free informational brochure has been forwarded to community centers and elderly housing complexes to explain how the program operates. Residents can also contact the Council Office at City Hall to have a brochure mailed to their home. Further information is also available by visiting the Helping Hand on-line web site accessible at the following internet address:

"<http://ci.quincy.ma.us/htmlhelpand.htm>"

The Helping Hand Program has also taken excess equipment and prepared it for transport to impoverished countries like the Dominican Republic. In recognition of these local and international efforts, the Helping Hand Program has received commendation from the National League of Cities for being an innovative and inexpensive program to help the needy.

Ayers reminds residents in need of medical equipment and those with items to donate to contact him at 472-9877 (home) or 472-0162 (Ayers Handicap shop). Those interested in participating with the program can also visit the Helping Hand Donations Center at 440B East Squantum St. in North Quincy.

First-Time Buyers Benefit From Flexible State Financing Program

"Every Massachusetts resident should have access to the economic benefits and security that come with owning your own home."

Those words were spoken by Gov. Paul Cellucci in support of the opportunities made available through the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency (MHFA), a state funded and run program that provides below-market financing for first-time home buyers.

"...MHFA's home buyer programs require no state tax dollars and are funded through the sales of bonds to private investors," Cellucci said in a statement advocating the program to residents of the Commonwealth. "I encourage all who qualify to take advantage of this opportunity to make the dream of owning a home a reality."

This endorsement from our governor truly captures the spirit behind the MHFA loan programs. The MHFA has made the American Dream a reality for more than 38,000 families since its inception and continues to be a major force in offering first-time home buyer opportunities.

MHFA funds are raised through the sale of tax-exempt bonds to private investors. As a result of these bond sales, the MHFA makes available a continual flow of mortgage funds to first-time buyers, as well as buyers in what the state deems to be designated as "priority" areas. A first-time home buyer need not be brand new to home ownership, as the MHFA defines a first-time home buyer as anyone who has not had a security interest in a principal residence within the last three years.

The first-time home buyer status is verified by the lender through the submission of federal tax returns by the borrower. MHFA has carved out an exception to the first-time home buyer rule for those potential buyers wishing to purchase in areas MHFA deems to be "federally targeted areas." Those communities include: Boston, Chelsea, Everett, Fall River, Lawrence, Lynn, North Adams, and Somerville.

The interest rate on these loans generally is about one half of one percent below the average rates on a 30 year mortgage, and the MHFA borrower has the choice of paying two, one, or zero points for the loan. A point, or an up-front fee charged by the lender, is equal to one percent of the loan amount. Of course the interest rate will reflect the point option chosen—the fewer points, the higher the rate. Any closing costs associated with the loan will vary from lender to lender.

In addition to the standard program, the MHFA has defined what it considers to be two higher-risk categories. The options include financing for two, three, and four family properties, as well as a three percent down payment option. For these two programs, attendance at a home-buying education course is required.

The customer interested in the MHFA loans needs to meet certain income and purchase price (acquisition cost) guidelines. These standards will vary based on the part of Massachusetts where the property is located.

As an example, for the Boston area, the current guidelines (these guidelines are subject to change), state that an MHFA borrower cannot earn more than $60,000 annually for a household of one or two people, or $69,000 for a household in which three or more people are working. The price of a property in the Boston area cannot exceed $184,000 for a single family, $207,000 for a two-family, $250,000 for a three-family, or $291,000 for a four-family.

A participating lender will assess your ability to purchase a home with MHFA financing by considering your income, assets, job stability, liabilities, and other factors. Your monthly housing expenses (principal, interest, taxes, and insurance) should not exceed 30 percent of your gross monthly income, and your housing expense plus long-term debt should not exceed 36 percent of your monthly income. You must also have a signed purchase-and-sale agreement or a signed offer to make the application for the loan.

For more information about the opportunities available to you through the MHFA, please call Conway Financial Services and ask to speak to a mortgage specialist. We will provide you with additional information about the MHFA loan programs, as well as a free mortgage analysis.

How To Prepare Your Home To Sell

Q: I'm going to be selling my home soon. Could you please tell me how to go about preparing my home so that it sells quickly? What do buyers typically look for?

A: Selling and buying a home is ranked among the most stressful experiences you'll ever go through in your adult life. That's why it's important to make it as easy on yourself as possible. And you can do that by simply setting the stage-make your home a potential buyer's dream. Here's how: Because most people buy homes because they've out grown their existing home or apartment and need more space, your job is to show them that space. That's right. The more space you have to sell them, the higher the price you're likely to get on your home.

To create that space, begin by eliminating excess furniture in your home. Remove storage, clean out your garage, and basically take every opportunity to create a wide-open look. Eliminate the clutter, because cluttered rooms just don't sell well to prospective buyers.

After cleaning your place up, paint it. Neutralize each room. In other words, paint with neutral colors (off-white, low-grade tan, etc.). A fresh, neutral paint job will go a long way towards helping prospective buyers envision their decorating preferences.

It is equally important to present your property as well cared for. Get all of your mechanical systems serviced by qualified contractors, such as your air-conditioning system, furnace, any plumbing leaks, any electrical switches, or outlets that are not working, and so on. Fix any minor problems before they become major ones.

Finally, while buyers will often want their own inspection, you will be far ahead of the game if you have a professional inspector check your house beforehand. An inspector can provide lists of needed repairs and can give you an early warning of any potentially major problems that are likely to creep up when a buyer's inspector gets involved.

Which Of These Costly Homeseller Mistakes Will You Make When You Sell Your Home?

QUINCY - A new report has just been released which reveals 7 costly mistakes that most homeowners make when selling their home, and a 9 step system that can help you sell your home fast and for the most amount of money.

This industry report shows clearly how the traditional ways of selling homes have become increasingly less and less effective in today's market. The fact of the matter is that fully three quarters of homesellers don't get what they want for their home and become disillusioned and - worse - financially disadvantaged when they put their home on the market.

As this report uncovers, most homesellers make 7 deadly mistakes that cost them literally thousands of dollars. They good news is that each and every one of these mistakes is entirely preventable.

In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "The 9 Step System to Get Your Home Sold Fast and For Top Dollar."

Tips To Help Smokers Kick The Habit

Tobacco has been cited as the chief remediable cause of illness and death in our society. According to the U.S. Surgeon General, "Smoking Cessation (stopping smoking) represents the single most important step that smokers can take to enhance the length and quality of their lives."

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Massachusetts Prevention and Wellness Program suggests these healthy tips to help smokers break way from the pack.

Trying to quit smoking is sometimes challenging for many people, because of the nicotine found naturally in tobacco. Nicotine addiction is the major reason why people smoke. The body becomes physically and psychologically dependent on nicotine.

Quitting smoking is more realistic these days with so many successful treatments, such as smoking cessation classes, over-the-counter nicotine replacement therapies and prescription drugs. Whether you are ready to quit or not, we encourage you to consider these tips:

- Smoking Myths Snuffed Out
- I'll gain weight if I quit. The average person gains less than 10 pounds -- a minor health risk compared to smoking.
- Someone I know lived to be 90 and smoked two packs a day. Some people are very lucky, but statistics show that smoking kills more than 430,000 Americans each year.

• Smoking calms me.

Nicotine is a drug that actually makes you more nervous. The cigarette you smoke to calm down feeds the withdrawal symptoms from your last cigarette. Withdrawal symptoms last only a few days when you quit.

• I live with a smoker, so it will be too hard to quit. Although your partner or household member may not be ready to quit, he or she can still support your efforts. Likewise, your efforts may motivate your partner to join in trying to quit.

• I really like to smoke, it makes me happy. Some people live to smoke, but when your reasons for quitting outweigh your reasons for smoking, quitting will make sense.

• It's my only bad habit. Smoking may be your only bad habit, but it's probably worse than all others combined. It's a temporary "pleasure" that comes at an extremely high price.

Once you are ready to quit, remember that successful quitters spend time preparing before they actually give up smoking. First you need to set a date. Select a date when you will not be under pressure, but remember: there's no time like the present.

Next, you're ready to choose a method. Anything you can do to disrupt your smoking routine is good, but for most people, the cold turkey method is the most effective. There are a dozen methods to help you quit smoking, so talk to your doctor to find out which one best suits you. Whichever method you use, remember, take one day at a time.

The withdrawal symptoms you experience are good news. This means your body is flushing out the harmful tobacco chemicals. These symptoms won't last long. Just remember the Three R's:

- Remind yourself why you quit smoking.
- Rehearse what to do to handle the urge to smoke when challenging situations occur.
- Reward yourself each time you beat the urge to smoke.

By quitting smoking, you're improving your health immediately. Your body begins to correct damage caused by smoking within minutes of your last cigarette. Within 20 minutes your blood pressure and pulse drop to normal, within 72 hours you'll breathe easier, and within three months your lung function improves up to 30 percent.

For more information on quitting smoking, call 1-800-TRY-TO-STOP.

Chiropractic Update
by Mark C. Jaehnig D.C.
WHAT IS A SLIPPED DISC?
The term "slipped disc" has been used commonly, by doctors and patients alike, to generally describe an injury to one of the 23 "jelly-like" shock absorbers found between each of the bones or vertebrae of the spine. These intervertebral discs are ligaments which actually consist of a "jelly-like" middle surrounded by rings of cartilage. While these discs do not actually "slip" from between the spinal bones, they can be worn, compressed, bulged, or ruptured causing pressure on the adjacent spinal nerves. It is this bulged or ruptured disc that pressures or "pinches" the nerve which actually causes the severe back and/or leg pain that may result. Often times, muscle spasms will accompany a disc injury as the body attempts to stabilize or splint the damaged lower back or neck.
While the intervertebral discs may lose some of their height and resiliency and dry out slightly over the years, the final straw of a disc injury may be a sudden twist or slip, an improper lift, or a seemingly minor accident.
Chiropractors are well qualified in the prevention and/or treatment of disc injuries and often employ the modern technology of MRI or Catscan to ensure accurate diagnosis. Chiropractors use a drugless, non-surgical approach which may include manipulation, forms of therapy, proper exercise and bed rest.
If you have any questions or would like to make an appointment please call Dr. Mark Jaehnig, a lifelong Quincy resident, at Quincy Chiropractic Office, 110 Billings Road, N. Quincy, 773-4400.

FORMER DENNISON AIRPORT pilot Bill Ellis presents a replica model of the WACO plane he flew at Dennison from 1927 to 1932 to Sharron Beals, executive director of the Beechwood Community Life Center.

AN EIGHT-FOOT Jenny propeller is explained by Ned Hauptner as he donates it to the Aviation History Info Center at the Beechwood Community Life Center.

At Beechwood Center Video, Artifacts Document Quincy's Link To Aviation History

The Aviation History Info Center at Beechwood Community Life Center is adding more unique artifacts as it documents the Quincy link to the early days of flight.

And, at a recent meeting attended by more than 30 aviation buffs, an oral history project partnership between the center and Eastern Nazarene College was launched.

Ned Vankevich, a professor in the college's Communications Arts Departments, and his students videotaped the proceedings and this spring will begin oral interviews of those with memories of the old Dennison Airport and Squantum Naval Air Station to help document their history.

Sharron Beals, executive director of the Beechwood Life Center, unveiled two rare photos, one of Amelia Earhart, who flew at Dennison and was a stockholder there. The other of Harriet Quimby, the country's first woman licensed pilot in the nation. The latter photo is mounted with fabric from a 1911 Beirut aircraft.

Earhart, the nation's most famous aviatrix vanished in the Pacific on an around-the-world flight in 1937. Her disappearance is still a mystery today.

Quimby, the first woman to fly over the English Channel in 1911, came to Squantum to compete in the 1912 Aeromeet and met a tragic death.

She and a passenger, William Willard, manager of the Aeromeet, were killed when their plane went into a dive and they were thrown out of it and plunged to their deaths.

Bill Ellis, a former Dennison pilot, presented a model plane replica of the WACO, one of the planes popular at Dennison from 1927 to 1932 and a model of the hangar there.

Ellis said he logged 180 flight hours. It took 240 hours, he said, to complete the WACO model.

Ned Hauptner of Milton, an aviation historian, presented an eight-foot 1917 Jenny propeller. He also proposed the establishment of an Aviation History Library.

Betty Dow, who was a WAVE stationed at the Squantum Naval Air Station, presented several albums of photographs taken there during the 1940s and 1950s.

Beals reported that she, Frank DeLear, aviation history and journalist and Paul Reynolds of Marina Bay are continuing their research of the 1910-1912 Aeromeets and have identified the correct site of them.

Among those attending the meeting was Ralph Verrachi, 93, who was the subcontractor for asphaltting the runways at the Squantum Air Station in 1942.

The Dennison Airport was established on a nine-acre marshland tract, North Quincy. The first official flight from there was in September, 1927.

Earhart, who was taking flying lessons at Dennison, was on that first flight. And she later regularly flew out of Dennison herself.

The Aviation History Info Center, entering its fifth year, focuses on the Quincy/New England chapter of early aviation.

The primary focuses of the center are the Beginning of Flight: Early 1900's, the Dennison Airport Days: 1920-30's, the Seaplane Base, and Squantum Naval Air Station.

"We are always interested in further contributions of information, artifacts and stories to enrich our collections," said Beals. "We look forward to documenting the fascinating history of this site and era. Professor Vankevich and his Eastern Nazarene students are welcome partners as we begin to carefully preserve personal, and oral histories for future generations."

The Aviation History Info Center Advisory Council comprises: Sharron Beals, Henry Bosworth, George Burke, Arthur Casey, Frank DeLear, David Dunceen, Peter O'Connell, Paul Reynolds and Don Uvanitte.

George Dunn Basketball Tournament Underway

The Quincy Recreation Department George Dunn Basketball Tournament for high school age participants is underway with a triple-header scheduled on Tuesday.

The tournament has been conducted for more than 30 years by the Recreation Department and is held annually to mark the conclusion of the 25-week winter gym program.

The Park and Recreation Board voted in July, 1997 to name the tournament for George Dunn who was a 20-year veteran working in the Quincy Recreation Department and with youth groups through the city. Mr. Dunn presented the renamed trophy to the winner Parker last April. He passed away in June after a long battle with cancer.

In the opening game of the tournament Squantum defeated Montclair 48-32, behind the high scoring of Pat Dolbear who had 18 points. Tim McAdams had 10, while Nick Cyr followed with 8 second-half points, including two 3-pointers that broke open a close game.

For Montclair, John Wallace had 8 points, followed by Nathan Thompson and Pat Conny each with 6. The Michelle Rawdon coached team also got 5 points from Andy Chiacchio, 2 points each from Andy Currie and Steve Shields, while Reid Donovan chipped in with 1 free throw.

Michael Curgin, the long-time Squantum coach, also got a balanced attack as Joe Donahue and Randy Feedham scored 4, while Mike Conroy and Pat Feeney each had 2 points. Squantum advanced to play Atherton Hough in the single elimination tournament after Atherton Hough upset a strong Bernazzani team, 37-34.

Atherton Hough overcame an 8-point half-time deficit to win in the last minute of play. Ryan Szabo was the leading scorer for Atherton with 13 points. Kenny Naumann and Peter Turowski contributed with 7 each, while Marc Gibbons tossed in 6 before fouling out in the second half. Brian Keefe and John Keely had baskets to round out the scoring for first-year coach Matt Gibbons.

Bernazzani saw seven players in the scorers' column in the hard-fought contest. Jim Fitzgerald had 11 to lead his club. T.J. Bell and Adam Goodrich had 7 points apiece, Robby Bell had 4 in the first half, as Pat Bregoli and Chad Fitzpatrick also had one basket each in the first half. Adam Tiro put in a free-throw to round out the scoring for the evening Snug Harbor coached Bernazzani entry.

In the third match up of the evening Snug Harbor advanced by holding on to defeat the first-ever Marshall entry in the tournament's long history by a score of 53-48. Snug Harbor will now play the defending champion Parker in the next round of action.

Joe Kearney had 8 in the first half and 7 in the second half as he lead his Marshall team with 15 points. Mouniv Nahas followed closely with 11 and Jared Decelle was a steady contributor with 9 for first-year coach John Sullivan. The rest of the Marshall scoring was done by Shawn Demore, 5, Dave Dyonung, 4, and Andrew Mannix, 2.

Nadream Nahas played great defense down the stretch. Pat O'Donoghue, the Snug Harbor coach, was pleased with the balanced scoring that saw seven team members score. Andrea Coleman was the leading scorer with 15, Willie Mandrell and Tim Kellam had 8, Geovanni Vonet had 7, Richard Kellam tossed in 6, Troy Coleman, 3, while Brian Sorenson had 2 first-half points.

The George Dunn Tournament will conclude on Tuesday, April 6.

Thoughts From The Sidelines

By CHARLES ROSS

This is the time of year that we call a lull in the local sports business. The winter teams are done and the spring teams don't play until April. For those of you marking up your calendar, here are some opening dates:

Baseball
Wednesday, April 7
Braintree at Quincy
Friday, April 9
Brighton at North Quincy

Softball
Tuesday, April 13
Silver Lake at NO
Quincy at Taunton.

Every year I watch the high school basketball and hockey state finals and watch the winning kids jump on top of each other. One of these years, I'd like the winners to have the word QUINCY or NORTH QUINCY on their uniforms...

Maybe I'm getting old, but former Quincy High Assistant Football Coach and now Principal Bob Keuther looks too young to be a principal. I always thought that gray hair was one of the job requirements...

I don't know who will be the next North Quincy football coach, but they sure will have quite a task to fill Ken McPhee's shoes...

Let's hope Boston College gets some more players to go along with North Quincy graduate Brian Ross...

Watching the Red Sox in Florida makes me glad my father brought me up to be a Braves fan...

Thirty-three years is a lot of time, but that's how long Bob Sylvia has been Quincy High's hockey Coach. The man is a class act...

I'm glad I once met Ted Williams, a true American hero as a ballplayer and fighter pilot...

Former Quincy High Basketball Coach Joe Amoroso has to be pretty happy as his son Joe is a sports reporter on channel 7...

Someday I want to meet Mary Pratt and find out more about the professional women's baseball league during WWII...

To those of you who think Fenway Park should be saved have never been to a baseball game in Baltimore's Camden Yards...

Let's give a cheer to all the student athletes who play in the Quincy Schools. They are all fine examples of their generation who carry on the tradition that you can get a excellent education and play competitive sports going to Quincy or North. To the students, teachers and coaches, keep up the good work!

Malachy Higgins Named NECC Player Of The Week

Malachy Higgins, a sophomore from Quincy, was named the New England Collegiate Conference (NECC) Player of the Week recently as the Franklin Pierce College baseball team went 1-1 against Assumption College.

A five-foot, 225-pound first baseman, Higgins batted 7 for 9 (.778), drove in five runs, scored three and belted a pair of homeruns in FPC's opener. The Ravens suffered an 8-4 loss in the first game, but battled back in the nightcap to win, 20-6.

A transfer from UMass Boston, Higgins made his Division II debut with a 3 for 4 performance in the opener which included two singles, a double and one RBI despite the loss. He opened the second game with a solo homerun and a three-run shot in his first two at-bats. He also smacked a pair of singles and drew a walk the rest of the way en route to a 4 for 5 performance that included four RBI and three runs scored.

"Mal is a big-time competitor. He takes every at-bat personally," said first-year coach Jayson King. "He expects to get a hit every at-bat. The attitude he brought is as big as his talent. He is a special player."

Higgins was UMass Boston's Team Most Valuable Player as a freshman and transferred in January to play for King, who coached there for two seasons until accepting the FPC job in July. Higgins is slated to play this summer for Leominster of the Northeast Collegiate Baseball League (NECBL).

A three-year player at North Quincy High School, Higgins earned All-Conference honors as a senior. He is the son of George and Susan Higgins of Quincy.

Interfaith Social Services 25th Annual Walk April 18

Interfaith Social Services, 776 Hancock St., Quincy, will conduct its 25th anniversary walk Sunday, April 18.

The 6.2-mile walk begins and ends at Bethany Congregational Church, 18 Spear St., Quincy. The walk starts at 1 p.m. with registration at 12:30 p.m. More than 600 walkers from the South Shore are anticipated.

The band, Reference Point, will provide the entertainment for the after-walk celebration.

The purpose of the walk is to raise funds to enable Interfaith Social Services to strengthen programs, expand services, and develop additional revenue for operating expenses. Each year, over 150 volunteers form the organization work for over six months to coordinate the event.

For the past 50 years, Interfaith Social Services has served the South Shore with the following programs: The Pantry Shelf, a food pantry; the Bureau Drawer, a thrift shop; the Adoption Program, and Counseling Services. The agency's programs assist people from Quincy, Braintree, Milton, Weymouth, Hull, Randolph, Scituate, Hingham, Holbrook, and Cohasset.

Rev. Art Curtis, pastor of Pilgrim Congregational Church in Weymouth, helped originate the walk 25 years ago. He will be involved with the event this year. He has participated in 20 of the Interfaith Walks throughout the years.

"This is a big anniversary for the walk. The walk helps the agency continue to serve people in need," Curtis said. "I don't think people realize the extent that the agency helps provide food throughout the South Shore or how many children have been placed in homes through the adoption program. A charitable agency like this one fills many needs."

For more information regarding Interfaith Social Services, contact Walk Coordinator Bettyanne Muir Lang at (617) 773-6203 or the Executive Director of Interfaith Social Services Mary Ann Walsh at (617) 773-6203.

SCOTT DEWARE

A Thought For The Week

Easter is the happiest holiday of Christendom, and the chorus of hal-lu-lu-jahs and alleluia sings around the world.

Men with little theology and less sensitivity somehow are awakened by the celebration. Men who have devoted lifetimes to the collection of material things pause to reflect on ultimate goals. For the devout, Easter is affirmation and reassurance. Easter is a miracle. It is a day when the insight is granted to discover that many of us may be dead within even when we can see and feel and hear and talk. This a cold tomb for a person who thinks he is living. Easter reminds him of the warm sunshine of love, the reality of caring and compassion.

Yes, the shadow of darkness falls away as the sun climbs over the horizon and rises into the Easter sky. If in the bright light of this day a frail mortal sees his sham, his prejudice, his insincerity and his insecurity; if he also can see goodness reaching into forever, then he has been a witness to the meaning of Easter...

CRITIC'S CORNER

OCTOBER SKY: On October 5, 1957, the former Soviet Union began the space race by launching Sputnik, an event which inspired a young West Virginia lad, Homer Hickham.

Jake Gyllenhaal portrays the young Hickham, a boy who dreams of going into space. However, Homer is from a generations-old mining family. It is fully expected that he will follow his forefathers into the mines. Homer's dad, played by Chris Cooper, is particularly disturbed by his son's aspirations.

teacher, Miss Riley (Laura Dern). She encourages and guides Homer and some of his friends to follow what they desire. The boys soon become determined to win at a science fair. This is quite a departure from the usual high-school sports pursuit. Yet, the boys show the same devotion to science as other boys show to football.

Homer Hickham, by the way, is a real person and this movie is based on his memoir, "Rocket Boys." Not only is it the story of a boy who achieves his goals, despite enormous opposition, but it is the tale of a father and son locked in the age-old conflict of the direction of the boy's life.

I highly recommend this touching, poignant movie. Rated PG, it's one the whole family can and should enjoy. See it with your own youngsters. I guarantee you'll come away feeling more devoted and appreciative of your children.

Watch Out For Those Potato Skins

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

It started out as a St. Patrick's Day dinner with smoked shoulder, cabbage, potatoes, turnips and the whole bit and ended up a clogged disaster.

Our daughters Nancy and Sue along with their families had come over for their favorite boiled dinner. I was pleased as they all seemed to enjoy it so---until it was time to clean up.

And just as we were doing just that, our disposal broke down leaving garbage in the sink and pans and bowls and dishes everywhere. Our guests said their goodbyes as there was nothing at all we could do. We couldn't wash any pans or put the dishwasher on so everything had to stay until the plumber arrived.

When it happened, I had immediately called our plumber, but he didn't return my call, so the next morning at 7 a.m. I called again, and still no return call.

That night after our daughters went home, my husband Jim had to go bowling, so as there was nothing I could do, and since I had to be at work at 8 a.m. the next day, I watched a little television and then went to bed. This marked probably the first time I had ever gone to bed after having dinner guests without cleaning up.

While I was at work, I wondered if the plumber had ever called back. After work when I arrived home and walked in the door, I noticed the pans and dishes had changed their position and were on the kitchen counter meaning that the plumber had come after all. What a pleasant surprise. So I thought.

However, the kitchen wasn't the only room affected. It seems that the trap for the disposal is in the downstairs bathroom.

My husband had no sooner removed a ceiling tile so that the plumber could open the trap, when garbage flew everywhere from the new stucco walls and wainscoting to the window, floor to the plumber's clothes. He had to go home to change.

Well, I didn't have to wash any pans or dishes, thanks to Jim, but instead I had to wash down walls, floors, and every-thing else in the bathroom from the window, curtains and rugs.

It seems that the potato skins from that boiled dinner thrown down the disposal swelled according to the plumber causing a big clog and ultimately a decrease in our check book.

The brochure from the disposal never included potato skins on the list of implanted in my brain don'ts, but I have it from now on.

April 2 Deadline For Congressional Art Competition

April 2 is the deadline for student artwork in this year's Congressional art competition, and artwork may be delivered to U.S. Rep. William Delahunt's Quincy office at 15 Cottage Ave., 4th Floor.

Delahunt said each entry will be displayed at an exhibition and reception he will sponsor Monday, April 19, at the North River Arts Society on Old Main Street, Marshfield Hills.

Judges for the competition include Judith Davis of the Artists' Circle of the Fuller Museum of Art in Brockton, John Kilroy of the North River Arts Society, and Frank Hogan of fine Arts Inc. in Orleans.

The entire initiative "is less about competition than about nurturing the artistic potential in students throughout our region," said the congressman.

Contest guidelines are available from Delahunt's office at 1-800-794-9911 and on his website at www.house.gov/delahunt-atrpt.htm.

Zooleck Worried About Relatives In Albania

Since NATO began the air strikes in Kosovo, South Shore Chamber of Commerce Chairman Ron Zooleck has been trying to reach his relatives in Albania without success.

"I am worried," said Zooleck. "My thoughts aren't much different from most people."

"There obviously is some form of ethnic cleansing, genocide, going on. The very fact that they've thrown the journalists out of the country is an indicator that they don't want the world to know what's happening or what's going to happen."

"Albania is not much different from Kosovo," Zooleck continued. "They are relatively poor people who scrape out a living in either agriculture or very basic trade. For the most part, they are defenseless and they are being literally murdered."

"I would like to say this: I do not blame an entire race for this, that is to say all Serbian people."

"There is a legitimate claim by rational Serbs to that land. The issue, however, should be settled by diplomacy and negotiation, not by who has the biggest gun.

"And I think an awful lot of Serbians are being unjustly criticized. It's a guilt by association issue."

"We have seen this before in history. All Germans are not guilty of the Holocaust, nor all Protestants or Catholics guilty of the kinds of killings in Northern Ireland. There are rational people among those nationalities who are unfortunately powerless to do anything about it."

Zooleck said even before the air strikes, telephone communication to Albania was difficult. "The phone lines are so poor, it's kind of a hit-or-miss situation. I will call again."

"With the number of calls being made by Albanian-Americans into Albania, for the same purpose of contacting the family, your chances are a little less than they would normally be."

It was only two years ago that Zooleck had traveled to Albania to see where his father had come from. "I went with Peter O'Connell, my best friend, and I discovered this family, my father's brother's son who is in his 70s."

"I was 8 years old, during World War II, when I last heard of them. I'm 60 now. They have been there and had lost contact, but through a series of coincidences, I learned of their existence."

"They had traveled five hours through the mountains to welcome him, he said."

Last May, Zooleck traveled again to Albania to teach a program for Albanian chamber of commerce executives through the auspices of the national chamber and the U.S. government, he said.

In September, with the financial help of Thomas Flatley, Zooleck brought medical supplies to Kosovo refugees who had fled into Albania.

Quincy Delegation Backs Death Penalty

"We voted against it today. Maybe that's because we haven't had a little boy abducted, raped or sexually assaulted."

"There will be a headline; it won't be tomorrow or next week, but it will come, and the people will rise up and say, 'Why don't we have a mechanism to give the appropriate penalty?' and there won't be a real good answer for them."

Last year the House voted 80-80 for a death penalty, but the tie vote blocked the measure. House Speaker Thomas Finneran this year was criticized for bringing the vote to the floor while six seats in the House remain unfilled. The speaker suggested that a vote on the death penalty now could still be a 77-77 tie.

When the death penalty was being debated last year, Robert Curley of Cambridge, father of 10-year-old Jeffrey Curley who was brutally murdered in 1997, pleaded for passage of a death penalty. Two men were convicted of the boy's murder.

Ayers, a freshman representative, said he campaigned on the death penalty issue. "I felt I was dutibound" to vote for it, he said, noting that his predecessor, Michael Bellotti, who is now the Norfolk County sheriff, had favored the death penalty as well.

"It's a situation where we must take a stronger stance in helping reduce crime," Ayers continued. "This would apply only to the very worst criminals, people who are multiple murderers, people who murder and torture victims, who murder and sexually assault a victim." He said a cop-killer or someone committing a murder while incarcerated would fall in that category as well.

"The key is 'with aggravating circumstances.'"

He said he was not pressured by any side to vote as he did. He said the governor's office had telephone him, but he was on the same side of the issue.

Rep. Ronald Mariano said he had received about 15 or 20 calls, the majority of which urged him to vote against the death penalty.

There were not as many calls as last time," said Mariano. "I probably received 75 to 100 calls, and they were split about 50 to 50."

Mariano said he voted for the death penalty because "it's been my feeling that there are some crimes that are so heinous that people forfeit their right to live in our society."

"And, I think if we can prevent one person from taking a life because of the death penalty, then we should have it."

Tobin said he had not been pressured to change his vote. "I've been here too long; there's no conceivable way I would change," he said.

When Bernard Cardinal Law last week appeared before his Committee on Criminal Justice, he was doing his job, said Tobin. "He has an obligation to articulate his concerns and the teachings of the church. I didn't see it as personal. People appreciate all viewpoints."

Tobin said although the House cannot initiate taking up the death penalty matter again during this legislative session, he said the Senate is free to do so.

Ayers added that the Senate could attach the death penalty bill to the state budget. "The Senate wants to be on record," he said.

Delahunt Visits NATO Headquarters In India

Bill Delahunt and a delegation of other congressmen was off to India last week, with a stop at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Southern Command Headquarters in Naples to review NATO operations in Bosnia and Kosovo.

On the way home, the delegation stopped in Prague to review developments in central Europe with officials of the Czech Republic, the newest member of NATO.

A member of the House International Relations Subcommittee on Trade, Delahunt went to India with House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt and seven other congressmen to discuss bilateral competitiveness and economic relations.

Delahunt noted that India, the world's largest democracy, is a potentially enormous marketplace for U.S. exports, including many firm on the South Shore barrier, said Shea.

"We're scanning the census forms into the computer now," he said, estimating that the entire process will be completed by July.

Quincy's population will not change significantly. "It's about the same; it's not going up drastically," he said.

Quincy has 88,781 residents.

Response To City Census Good So Far

The city census isn't quite finished, but the response has been good, said City Clerk Joseph Shea.

He said this week, a team of census workers began personally visiting multi-family homes, those with eight or more units, to collect data.

Residents of single-family homes have been very good about responding, he said.

Letters in Cantonese or Vietnamese have been sent to selected homes where there may be a language

"They are sifting through the debris for any material that might be [used] for a bomb," he said, adding that he could not say when those forensic results would be available.

An autopsy was conducted Tuesday at the Southern Mortuary in Boston, but the cause of death had not been released.

Quincy Police Lt. Thomas Malvesti said police received a 911 call at 6:38 p.m. from a family member who was upstairs in the house at the time.

When police and firefighters arrived, they found the man lying outside a small woodworking shop in the basement, he said. There appeared to be little damage, he added.

"It's too early for us to know what has happened," added Malvesti late Tuesday afternoon. "Family members were emotional."

Deputy Fire Chief Anthony Inello said he saw a slight haze coming from the cellar and smelled an odor when he arrived at the house, according to officials.

Ibrahim had lived at 93 Standish Ave. for 11 years and had worked for Decore Upholstering Company on Harrison Avenue in Boston for several years.

He is survived by his wife, Zahra D. (Abouzeid)

Ibrahim; nine children, George, Katia, Bernard, Deeb, Atta, Gabi and Tady, all of Quincy, Lidia Chehine of California and David Ibrahim of Weymouth; two brothers, two brothers, Nicholas Ibrahim and Tanous Ibrahim of Lebanon, and 10 grandchildren.

Ordered To Turn Over Notes, Papers, Other Materials

Councillors Summoned In Highpoint Court Suit

By MARILYN JACKSON

Lawyers for Highpoint developer Dean Stratouly, president of Congress Group Ventures Inc. of Cambridge, and for the city have drawn their battle lines, this time in court.

City councillors received summonses both from the city's building department and from Congress Group Ventures to turn over all material in their possession related to the Highpoint development proposal.

Last month, the City Council, acting as the special permit granting authority for the Planned Unit Development, rejected a downsized proposal, approved earlier by the Planning Board, to build 1,195 luxury units.

The new proposal, pared down from an originally proposed 1,641 units, called for building 995 one- and two-bedroom apartments and 200 senior living units. The developer also had agreed to conditions set by the planning board which included making traffic improvements, installing water mains along Quarry Street to improve fire flows and providing a second large main loop to Quincy Hospital.

Now, attorneys from Hill and Barlow, which represents Congress Group Ventures, have fired several salvos at the city, claiming not only that the project was approved by default because

Romano Indicted For Murder In Wife's Death

Joseph Romano, 41, of 71 Huntress St., Quincy, has been indicted by a Norfolk County grand jury for the murder of his wife, Katherine Leonard Romano, 39, who was reported missing Sept. 29 by her father.

Romano will be the first person prosecuted for first degree murder in Massachusetts courts without the presence of a body, said District Attorney William Keating.

Romano had been arrested last December and has remained at the Dedham jail in lieu of $500,000 since his arrest Dec. 30.

A date has not yet been set for Romano's arraignment in Dedham Superior Court.

Although no Massachusetts court has convicted a first degree murderer without the recovery of a victim's remains, two dozen jurisdictions from California to Texas to Maine have won convictions without a body," Keating said.

According to the medical examiner's report, specimens recovered from the Sawzall power tool and its casing seized as evidence in this case revealed "skin, cartilage, connective tissue, skeletal muscle and nerve" with DNA identified as that of Katherine Romano. The

Search Resumes At Granite Rail Quarry

By MARILYN JACKSON

A Cape Cod firm that participated in salvage efforts on the downed TWA flight 800 off the coast of New York two years ago was at the Granite Rail Quarry Tuesday to resume the search for a body sighted in the water more than two years ago.

District Attorney William Keating had hoped to resume the underwater search in January after he had been sworn into office, but State Police divers told him that it was not safe for recovery efforts at that time, even though the level of the water in the quarry had been lowered by about 115 feet, and recommended that he wait until warmer weather.

About 35 feet of water remain in the area where the body is believed to be. Also in the area are junk cars, fallen trees and other debris which pose a serious danger to the divers.

On Tuesday personnel from American Underwater Recovery were on the scene operating an underwater camera outfitted with 1000-watt lights and other equipment including a sonic mapping device to create a video and topographical map of the entire quarry floor with its varying depths.

Earlier, a crane was moved to the edge of the quarry in order to lower skiffs and search personnel into the which spans more than two acres.

Should the camera come across a body, the State Police dive team will be able

Concourse Public Meeting April 10

The Citizens Advisory Committee (CAC) for the Quincy Center Concourse has scheduled a special public meeting Saturday, April 10 at 11:30 a.m. in the City Hall annex, second floor conference room, 1305 Hancock St.

The purpose of the meeting is to allow interested residents, business representatives and city councilors to comment or express concerns about phase two of the multi-million roadway.

Phase one linking Burgin Parkway to the west side of Hancock St. has been let out for bid and groundbreaking is scheduled this spring. The bridge over the MBTA Red Line and commuter rail tracks has been approved.

Phase two pertains to the east side of Hancock St. and the roadway connector to McGrath Highway and Southern Artery.

The CAC and representatives of Each Tech engineering company will receive public input at the Saturday meeting.

CAC has concerns about Mechanic Street and Revere Road, traffic signals and controls, pedestrian safety, and various intersections at Spear, Brackett, Newcomb, Elm Streets and Miller Stile Rd.

The focus on discussion will be the 25 percent engineering design plans for phase two as submitted by Earth Tech.

Street Sweeping Underway

The Department of Public Works announces its spring street sweeping is underway.

"The DPW requests that residents avoid on-street parking on the days scheduled for their neighborhoods so that we may maximize our cleaning efforts," said DPW Commissioner David Colton. "The DPW is happy to help make our streets and business districts part of the cleaner and greener program."

In addition, Mayor James Sheets announces the city's second annual "Yard Care Conference" will take place at the Koch Family Park & Recreation Complex on Saturday, May 22 from 9 to 11 a.m. The free conference will feature presentations from experts in the fields of turf care, gardening, tree-care and composting.

"The Yard Care Conference was a tremendous success in its first year," said Park, Forestry and Cemetery Director Tom Koch. "People learned valuable tips on yard care from the experts."

"Many went home with prizes of flowers, shrubs and planting supplies. If you have any questions or want to learn how to maintain your yard like an expert, you can

In conjunction with Cleaner, Greener Quincy and the Yard Care Conference, the Park Department will conduct its "Neat Neighbors" contest again this year. Last year, the Park Department recognized 25 homeowners for their commitment to maintaining their yards and properties in the spirit of a cleaner and greener Quincy.

Winners received their choice of a new tree, shrub, or flowering plant. More than 150 people received honorable mention in a successful first season of the contest. Details on how you can nominate a friend or neighbor in 1999 will be released next month.

Surgeons-Podiatrists

HEEL PAIN: SURGERY VS CONSERVATIVE CARE

Heel pain is very common and a major reason why patients visit podiatrists. In our practice, some weeks as many as 20 people come in with this complaint. In most cases, non-surgical treatment can be quite successful in eliminating the pain. This includes stretching exercises, anti-inflammatory agents, steroid injections, physical therapy and custom-molded orthotics (shoe inserts). However, a small percentage of patients fail to improve.

In general, some podiatrists and orthopedic surgeons like to wait at least 9 months before surgery is contemplated. Surgical approaches commonly used are either an "open" procedure where a generous incision is made on the inside of the heel or an Endoscopic Plantar Fascial Release (which requires a less invasive method). A recent study showed that out of 68 surgeries using both procedures, 85% of the results were associated with patient satisfaction and relief of heel pain. The high success was also due to the fact that patients had undergone vigorous conservative treatment prior to the surgeries. Therefore, it appears that the combination of both conservative therapy and either surgical approach led to a good outcome.

If you are suffering from these or any other foot related complaints, call us at 773-4300. We are located at 1261 Furnace Brook Parkway, Suite #18, Quincy, and are affiliated with Carney, Quincy and South Shore Hospitals.

'Fatal Vision' Goggles Show Drunk Driving Dangers

The Quincy Police Department has introduced a new program to educate residents about drunk driving, announces Chief Thomas Frane.

The $600 program, called "Fatal Vision," was donated to the Quincy Police Department by Hastings-Tarpley Insurance Agency, 12 Granite St., Quincy through the Citizen Police Academy Alumni Association. The program was paid for by Commonwealth Insurance Co. Hastings-Tarpley is an agent for Commonwealth Insurance.

The "Fatal Vision Kit" contains several different sets of goggles. When worn, one set of goggles simulate what a person would see if they had a blood alcohol level of .08, a level that is considered intoxicated under Massachusetts law. The second pair of goggles simulates what a person would see if they were a .17, which is considered well over the legal limit of intoxication.

Through the use of the goggles, developed by an optician, the wearer will better understand how their depth perception and decision making is distorted by the use of alcohol.

In 1997, alcohol was involved in two out of five motor vehicle fatalities.

There were more than 17,000 fatalities from alcohol-related crashes.

More than 300,000 persons were injured in alcohol related crashes. That's one person injured every two minutes.

With the use of the Quincy Police will educate teens and adults about the reality of drunk driving. The program will be presented in the high schools, Citizen and Senior Police Academies and to local civic organizations.

Groups wishing to have this presentation can contact Officer Bob Hanna at 745-5719.

Sheets Now Longest Plan A Mayor

Mayor James A. Sheets was recognized as the longest serving mayor under the Plan A form of government by Councillor Frank McCauley Monday night. As of March 21, 1999, the mayor has eclipsed the longevity of the late Charles A. Ross who was mayor for 9 years, 2 months and 20 days, said McCauley in a resolution which was unanimously adopted by the council.

McCauley said he had another "whereas" in his resolution which stated that the council hopes that the mayor continue for many years to come, but that whereas was deleted.

"You may ask how does someone reach that point of 9 years, 2 months and 20 days, and my answer is, Read my book," continued McCauley. "It will be priced at a modest $39.99, with a 10 percent discount for city councillors."

Councillor-at-large Timothy Cahill jokingly asked if there was a senior discount, and McCauley replied no.

Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa served 12 years as mayor, eight under Plan A and four under Plan E. Under Plan E, he was a city councillor, similar to a City Council President, and a city manager was the chief executive.

Keep It Point Webster

When the Point Webster Middle School opens in the fall, that's what School Committee man Ron Mariano wants it to be: Point Webster.

"I feel we should keep that name," says Mariano. "It shouldn't be changed."

"By keeping the Point Webster name we will emphasize the neighborhood school concept and maintain a sense of history and continuity."

There has been some talk that perhaps the school should be named after someone—maybe an educator or political figure.

But Mariano planned to introduce a motion at last night's (Wednesday) School Committee meeting that would retain the name Point Webster.

"The building is being completely renovated," says Mariano. "It is a new middle school but it is not a new school building. It dates back to the 1920s."

Mariano says that many people who grew up in Quincy Point—including himself—have a cherished link to Point Webster.

"Many of us went there nine years as youngsters," says Mariano. "Six at the Daniel Webster elementary school and three at Quincy Point Junior High School."

The Webster school was on one side and Point Junior on the other—connected to one another.

Mariano was a student there at Webster from 1952-1958 and at Point Junior 1958-61.

And, he taught two years at the Webster school in the late 1970s.

Mariano notes that thousands of residents down through the years went to both Webster and Point or just to Point if they came from the Pollard and Washington elementary schools.

"Whether they went there nine years to both Webster and Point or just three to Point, they closely identify with the Point Webster name."

And no doubt, all of them would second Mariano's motion to keep it Point Webster.

MAYOR JAMES SHEETS and his wife, Joann, are looking forward to two more grandchildren who will arrive on the same day.

Daughter

Kim, and her husband, Stephen Woodward of the Atlanta, Ga., area gave them the exciting news: they are expecting twins in September.

This will make five grandchildren for His Honor and the First Lady. And, maybe, his first grandson—or two.

They now have three granddaughters: The Woodwards have two daughters, Julie, 6, and Jessica, 9.

And, son, James Sheets and wife, Stephanie, of Rochester, N.Y., are parents of a daughter, Laura, 4.

IT WAS A big day in the young life of Samantha Logue, daughter of Jennifer and David Logue of Wollaston.

Samantha was recently "Student of the Week" in Erin Lydon's first grade class at the Beechwood Knoll School.

Which entitled her to bring something or someone to a sort of "show and tell" day in the class. Samantha decided to bring Papa.

Papa is former Mayor and City Councilor Frank McCauley. Samantha's mom, Jennifer, is Frank and Sandra's daughter.

And, if it was a big day for Samantha, it was a big day for Papa, too.

He brought a citation from Mayor James Sheets proclaiming the day "Samantha Logue Day in Quincy." And Frank brought along coloring sheets for the other pupils to color and read them a book.

A LITTLE ACTIVITY on the political front.

Maryann Mahony, candidate for the Ward 6 City Council seat, has a campaign kickoff fundraiser set for Thursday, April 15, 7 to 9 p.m. at Raffael's, Enterprise Dr., North Quincy. Tickets are $15 and will be available at the door or by contacting Ralph Ames, campaign manager, at 328-3466.

Bruce Ayers, now a state representative, is leaving the Ward 6 seat at the end of the year. Mahony has been his campaign manager for the past 10 years.

JOHN CAIN, candidate for the Ward 3 City Council seat, will hold his first campaign fundraiser Wednesday, April 28, 6 to 9 p.m. at the Quincy Neighborhood Club, Glendale Rd.

There will be live entertainment by Richard Fryer and Peter Swan.

Tickets are $50 and can be obtained by calling 689-0810 or by mailing a check payable to the Committee to Elect John Cain, P.O. Box 128, Quincy, MA 02170.

Volunteers who would like to help in the campaign are also asked to call that number.

TONY DELMONICO, who was one of the city's top masons and served on the Park-Recreation Board, has been a patient at Quincy Hospital since early February where he underwent two by-pass operations and is being treated for other complications.

His daughter, Jeanne Reardon, clerk of City Council Committees, reports he is "doing well."

Tony retired from the Park Department in 1982 and was then appointed to the Park-Recreation Board by Mayor Frank McCauley, serving until 1989.

During his time with the Park Department he did a lot of notable masonry throughout the city. Including restoring the Abigail Adams Cairn in South Quincy and the Myles Standish Cairn in Squantum. He also put the finishing touches to the Ruth Gordon Amphitheatre. And when he built something, it stayed built.

Tony was active in the Koch Club, organizing youth baseball, softball, basketball and bowling programs in the Broad Meadows areas. For his long-time volunteer work, he was honored with the first Richard J. Koch Youth Service Award in 1996, presented at the Flag Day celebration.

And, just a personal note: Best wishes, Tony. I know you'll be pleased to hear that the wall is still standing strong and sturdy.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1926 POSTCARD view looking down what is now Macy Street from its intersection with Sea Street in Houghs Neck. Very little remains the same here. The A&P, which was one of 12 in Quincy at the time, is now the site of the Houghs Neck Community Center. The large building on the left was the Midland Hotel and is now the site of two houses. All the shops on the left are gone as well.

The Teaching Profession And Respect

Editor, The Quincy Sun:
This June, I will complete my 28th year as English as a Second Language teacher for Quincy Public Schools at the F.W. Parker Elementary School.

During these years, I have witnessed and stood in awe of my colleagues as the generosity of their souls and spirits have imprinted themselves on the lives of the children who enter their classrooms each year. Many of the students are experiencing for the first time a nurturing and secure environment as well as a compassionate and caring adult: Teachers care!

Sadly, the teaching profession has become the political scapegoat of city budgets and the decaying condition of American society. Public schools are help responsible not only for students' inability to read and compute, but also for divorces, unwed motherhood, alcoholism, increased weapons use and on and on. Yet, despite this continual disrespect of our profession our superintendent, administrators, principals and teachers, impeded by legislation and attitudes dedicated to the ultimate dismantling of public education, continue to seek solutions and some hope for the disenfranchised children of Quincy.

Now to address" teacher emotional stability and pure human judgment" as well as civics lessons and teachers' disrespect towards Mayor Sheets. The civics lesson I believe we provided was the following: We live in the United States of America where the Constitution allows citizens the right to assemble peacefully to protest unfair policy set by our elected officials.

During the entire rally and march, escorted by Quincy's excellent Police Department, the teachers conducted themselves with humor and goodwill. Not one teacher uttered an expletive, raised a fist, threw a rock or exhibited violence of any kind. Indeed, it was a civics lesson in its most magnificent form, an excellent example of emotionally stable, responsible adults, teachers, who used extraordinarily good judgment in voicing this disapproval of governing policy in a democracy.

As far as the disrespect shown Mayor Sheets, I will refer to Debra Eaton's understanding of earned respect as it relates to Mayor Sheets and Quincy teachers. If Mayor Sheets desires respect, he too must understand that respect is earned, not simply given.

Community Policing A Good Idea Then And Now

Editor, The Quincy Sun,
What is community policing? A number of Quincy neighborhoods have it, but what is it? Last year when the City Council was debating this police concept, I heard much rhetoric about it, but mostly it was just a lot of words.

As a police sergeant for the State Department of Mental Health in the Metro Boston area, we have been doing community policing for nearly a quarter-century. Since I joined the Force in 1985, community policing has made the job of our police officers that much better.

It is the recognition of a mutual ground between the police and those being protected. Community policing is not the mounted patrol unit or the motorcycle squad. It is not a division of the police, it is the thinking of the police. It's the way we think. It isn't just us and them, it's just us.

Community policing has shown itself to be an effective tool in the fight to keep neighborhoods livable. The police can't do the job alone. Just as the people are the government, the people are also part of community policing. It won't work if it's a one-way street because that's a dead end.

Community policing is a new catchword but the idea behind it is an old one. Back in the Fifties, it was called the beat cop. It was the guy everyone knew in the neighborhood. He wasn't just a guy wearing a uniform and badge, he was someone we all knew and, even better, he knew us. We lost that concept in the Sixties and Seventies when police work went high tech. Sometimes you just can't beat old fashioned ideas like the cop who knew the neighborhood like the back of his hand. Neighborhoods were safer when the law had a face and a name and when the law worked with neighborhoods to effectively serve and protect each other.

Community policing shouldn't be a political ploy used by cops to sound tough.

Community policing is also more than neighborhood watches. Community policing is police seeking the input of the neighborhood and the neighborhood working with the police.

The Atlantic Neighborhood doesn't officially have community policing yet but in reality it actually does because every time we as a neighborhood or as individuals communicate with our police department about what we see and hear, we actually do community policing. The word doesn't have to be written on the side of a police cruiser but the word does have to be written inside ourselves as we live out our lives in the place we call our neighbor-

Someone once said of politicians: If they have to choose between doing something or nothing, the cops will always choose nothing because it's cheaper and easier. However, here in the city of Quincy, our politicians actually did something.

I commend the Quincy Police Department and Chief Thomas Frane for the implementation of community policing. As I talk with Quincy police officers, I see the city of Quincy becoming an even safer and more livable community where people trust their police and the police work with them.

Community policing - it was a great idea back when I was a kid and it is an even better idea today.

20,000 Shop In One Day At Bargain Center

By PAUL HAROLD

Quincy Center's landmark shopping emporium, the Bargain Center, attracted 20,000 shoppers on the first day of its fourth anniversary sale. Some $300,000 worth of merchandise was sold at prices as low as 10 percent of its value.

The staff of 75 sales clerks was expanded by 375 for the sale. Shoppers jammed the streets and sidewalks surrounding the store, with an average wait of one hour to get in.

Thirteen police officers were assigned to handle the crowds, with a special detail in the basement, the hottest destination for the bargain shoppers.

The 25-day old bus strike had little if no impact on the numbers at this year's sale.

OPTIONS SEEN FOR FURNACE BROOK SCHOOL

Councillor Amelio Della Chiesa and a local developer suggested two options for the proposed new Furnace Brook School to be built on land adjacent to the golf course.

Della Chiesa's proposal called for the construction of two "small" schools in place of the "big" one. One would be built on the South Central Ave. playground with the second on Faxon property off Carroll's Lane and Whitwell St.

The Spinelli Group, developers of houses between Adams St. and Furnace Brook Parkway, suggested a school on vacant land in the middle of that neighborhood. The site lay between Brae Rd. and Miles Dr., with access from Furnace Brook Parkway and Puritan and Joan Drs.

SUPPORT SOUGHT FOR HARBOR EXPRESSWAY

Rep. Nathaniel Hurlwitz of Cohasset sought Quincy's support for his proposed harbor expressway that would connect Boston and the South Shore by a harbor route.

Plans showed a causeway running along Wollaston Beach with a bridge along the shore from Merrymount to Post Island with another bridge connecting Houghs Neck to Weymouth.

Foot & Notes

by Dr. Richard A. Hacker
Surgeon-Podiatrist

PEDIATRIC GROWTH PLATE INJURY

Growth plates are structures at the ends of children's bones that allow them to grow to adult size. Injury to one of these structures in a child's foot may mimic a sprain and may be misdiagnosed. Growth plate injuries may happen during athletics, a car accident, or even a simple fall. Untreated, a growth plate may partially close, leading to an angle deformity, or it may stunt further growth in the bone entirely. X-rays taken to rule out a fracture may appear entirely normal. Pain, when pressure is applied directly to the growth plate areas, is the key to this injury's diagnosis. Depending on the severity of misalignment of the plate, proper treatment may range from immobilization to surgical intervention.

When you have a small child to care for, we believe one of the most important things we can provide you with is education. And taking care of the feet can't begin to early. If there seems to be a problem with your child's feet, we hope you'll consider giving us a call at 617-472-3466. We bring you these columns in the hopes of showing you how the many benefits of podiatric medicine can help keep you and the members of your family walking in comfort. Our office is located at 110 W. Squantum Street in North Quincy.

P.S.: Growth plates usually close up during adolescence, though there is a wide range in the age by which one normally attains full growth.

'Blue Bin Instant Win' Contest

Residents To Win Cash For Recycling

Mayor James Sheets, state and local officials, and the Quincy Recycling Commission have launched the Blue Bin Instant Win Contest which will reward randomly selected Quincy residents with $100 cash just for participating in the Quincy Recycling Program.

"For eight weeks this Spring, Quincy residents can cash in on recycling," Sheets said. "The Quincy Blue Bin Instant Win contest is creative strategy to get people in the recycling habit."

City officials said they hope the contest will spur more people to participate in the recycling program. "Quincy was one of the first towns to establish a recycling program in Massachusetts," said DPW Commissioner David Colton. "Now it is time to Quincy had one of the highest recycling rates, too."

Officials note Quincy's recycling rate is 26% which promoted the state to give it a 'B' grade according to its rating system.

"Increasing our recycling rate is a priority to protect our health and the environment," said Sally Owen, Quincy Recycling Commission chairman. "The more we recycle, the less trash we send to landfills and incinerators, the more resources we save."

The contest commences April 26 and runs through June 18. To enter, residents must affix the contest sticker they received in the mail on their blue bin, write their name on it, and recycle according to city guidelines.

Each week day a name will be announced daily. Five of their who are also participating in the contest will be randomly selected and notified by mail that they are entered into the grand prize drawing to win $1,000.

The grand prize drawing will take place the last week of June.

The contest is sponsored by the City of Quincy, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection, the Massachusetts Recycling Coalition and the Recycling Initiative Campaign.

QUINCY PUBLIC WORKS Commissioner David Colton and Quincy Recycling Commission Chairman Sally Owen announce the "Blue Bin Instant Win" contest which randomly rewards local citizens for recycling with $100 cash. The contest begins April 26.

Raymondi Wants To Plug Tax Loophole Through Election Ballot Question

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi wants to close a tax loophole which if approved by the voters would generate more revenue for the city.

He suggested that the question be placed on the ballot this fall.

The ballot question asks that a state law be adopted which would allow the city to assess improved real estate at the time an occupancy permit is issued.

This would enable the property to be assessed on a pro rata basis, he explained.

As assessing procedures apply now, taxes for the fiscal year are assessed at the valuation of the previous calendar year. Therefore, the tax rate for the fiscal year 2000, which begins July 1, 1999, is based on the valuations of property as of Jan. 1, 1998.

Groundbreakings for large developments after January 1999 won't be taxed at their full value until fiscal year 2001, said Raymondi.

He said the property also would have to be improved by 50 percent and would particularly apply to commercial property.

The proposal was referred to the finance committee which will ask Mayor

James Sheets, the assessors and the city auditor for their input.

"We need to take action by July 1 in order to put the question on this year's ballot for the tax rate year of 2001," said Raymondi.

"This closes a loophole," added Councillor-at-large Frank McCauley. "For an average person, a homeowner, it won't hurt, but it will recoup some of the tax money from developments."

Added Council President Peter Kolson, "We've lost a lot of revenue. [The additional revenue] would help with the city's major program to revitalize the schools."

Morrill Returns To Work After Electrical Shock

A marine mechanic at Massachusetts Heavy Industries' Fore River shipyard was back at work Tuesday after sustaining an electrical shock last Friday in a trailer that quickly burst into flames.

"I'm pretty good," said William Morrill of Beebe Road. "I'm a little beat up. I turned on a lamp and got zonked."

Morrill was working on a lamp inside a 40-foot trailer next to the machine shop around noon last Friday when he tried to switch on a lamp and "got belted" with 110 volts of electricity from an extension cord, said Fire Chief Thomas Gorman.

"Apparently, he was knocked unconscious. The next thing he knew, he was crawling out of the trailer," said the chief.

Three firefighters — Lt. James Kennedy and Firefighters Richard Dicesare and Joseph Goodwin — and two fire department mechanics, Jim April and Mike O'Connor, saw heavy smoke pouring from the trailer and rushed over to Morrill, pulling him away from the trailer just as it burst into flames.

Dicesare and Goodwin, both EMTs, administered first aid to Morrill while Kennedy summoned an ambulance and struck a box to bring more fire equipment to the scene. Gorman said two engines, two ladders and a rescue truck responded.

Morrill was rushed to Quincy City Hospital and transferred to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston for treatment for smoke inhalation and cardiac tests.

"He's a little sore today, but he's doing O.K.," said Peter Ladd, a manager at Massachusetts Heavy Industries.

Gorman said Kennedy, Dicesare and Goodwin were at the shipyard preparing a tunnel project training course for MWRA workers.

The trailer and its contents were destroyed, and the wood frames of the windows in the adjacent two-and-a-half story machine shop were burned, said Gorman, who estimated the damage totaled about $4,000.

Morrill, who owns Creative Fairs, a special events firm, is active in the community. He is parade coordinator for Quincy's First Night celebration and a member of the Flag Day Committee and the Quincy Millennium Committee and other special city events.

Last fall he drove across the country visiting the 16 other Quincys as the city's "ambassador of goodwill."

Flood Control Topic For Ward 5 Meeting Tonight

The Ward 5 Community Association will meet tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. at the Bernazzani School, Furnace Brook Parkway.

The meeting topic is flood control plans for Furnace Brook Parkway and Cunningham Brooks. Guest speakers will include Henry Barabaro, project manager for the Massachusetts Highway Department and Bob Goober of Weston & Sampson Engineering.

"It seems as if pump pumps and garden hoses are required equipment for residents and business owners who live or work near Furnace Brook Parkway or Cunningham Brook," said Ward 5 Community Association President Douglas Gutro.

"Every time the weatherman predicts rain, residents and business owners in this area scramble to minimize flooding and property damage, and commuters and pedestrians have to navigate with care to avoid puddles and flooded roadways. This meeting should give us all a chance to hear what is in the works to help alleviate the flooding problems in these areas."

Councillors Summoned In Highpoint Court Case

the City Council's decision was not filed in a timely fashion but also that some of the reasons for the denial were capricious.

And, these lawyers argue that two of the councillors should not have voted on the proposal. They claim that Councillor Timothy Cahill should have recused himself from the vote and discussions of the multi-million-dollar project because his relatives own homes abutting the proposed project and that Councillor Stephen Durkin should not have voted on the plan because he did not attend all three P.U.D. hearings.

Councillor Daniel Raymond, who also has relatives who own property abutting the site, did not participate in any of the hearings or in the vote.

The attorneys also allege that a meeting was held March 1, long after the hearing had closed, during which the project was discussed and city councillors decided to deny the Highpoint proposal. Representatives of Highpoint did not attend this meeting, nor were they invited.

In addition, both Durkin and Councillor Michael D'Amico had held neighborhood meetings after the hearings had closed and decided to vote on behalf of their constituents rather than on the merits of the proposal, the lawyers argued.

City Solicitor Stephen McGrath subsequently filed a lawsuit in Norfolk County Superior Court to dismiss the claim that the project is allowed by default because the city council, as special permit granting authority, had voted on the project within the required 90 days.

The decision, however, was filed March 11, which was 92 days after the P.U.D. hearing had closed.

In its reasons for denying the special permit, the City Council cited "deficiencies in the development plans" — excessive density, inappropriate location, a significant physical hazard at the rear of the steep slopes and the loss of a treed buffer zone.

The developer's lawyers note that existing zoning would allow for such a large development on the 75-acre site which is near not only single-family and two-family homes but apartment buildings, multi-family homes and condominiums as well. In addition, other apartment developments have been sited in other neighborhoods of one- and two-family homes.

They also stated that the developer had secured approvals from the state Department of Environmental Protection on a remediation plan for the site in connection with the proposed Highpoint project and anticipated spending about $3.7 million to cover large sections of the site with three feet of clean fill.

After quarrying on the site was halted in the mid-1930s, the area was used as a landfill. At one point, the city owned all of the before selling pieces of it for private development.

Two development proposals had been approved; one in 1975 for 1,989 units and another in 1988 for 975 units. DDFA Associates LLC and Congress Group Ventures acquired the land for $8.5 million in September 1997 and filed an application last June for a special permit to develop luxury apartments on the site.

Highpoint would have been one of the largest residential complexes on the South Shore.

Just as Councillors-at-large Frank McCauley and Paul Harold predicted, Stratouly could appeal to the courts or he could go through the anti-snob zoning law where he could bypass the council.

Last week, Stratouly asked the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency to sponsor a housing proposal for the site which would include apartments for low- and middle-income families as well as market-rate units.

Last month Councillor-at-large Paul Harold said he believed Quincy probably has its share of affordable housing, "but because of the need statewide, this could be imposed upon us from Boston. It's a concern, really because of the numbers; the state could allow a density in excess of what the planning board had recommended."

Harold and other councillors said they were deluged with calls from residents angry about the proposal. "Let's buy the land," they say. But that's not an option. The city doesn't have the capacity to do that. Or if they buy it, the city won't be able to build a new high school or finish the library.

Mayor James Sheets said Tuesday he expected that legal fees will cost the city at least $250,000 and would ask the City Council to appropriate part of that sum within the next week or so. He said he would not ask for the total amount at this time because the fiscal year ends June 30.

Attorney Thomas Kiley of Quincy, former first assistant attorney general during Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti's tenure, has been hired as special counsel.

In addition, David Standley, an environmental consulting engineer who reviewed the developer's environmental studies of the project, has been engaged to remain on board for the lawsuit, said Sheets. "And if we need to hire an environmental lawyer, we will do that."

Asked whether there is any room for negotiations with the developer, Sheets responded that it would be up to the City Council to proceed as the permit granting authority as well as Stratouly.

Earlier, City Solicitor Stephen McGrath said the developer "could return to the City Council with a substantially different proposal without having to wait the two-year moratorium or, if it is not significantly different, reapply for a P.U.D. permit with planning board approval."

McCauley Book Featured During National Library Week

Councillor and former Mayor Francis McCauley is in the spotlight for National Library Week as the author of a forthcoming book on Quincy's political history.

McCauley will give a sneak preview of the book Tuesday, April 13 at 7:30 p.m. at the Adams Shore Library, 519 Sea St.

The book, which covers Quincy politics from 1889 to 1999, is McCauley's first and will be available in the spring of 2000. Photos, graphs and outlines will complement the text. The first-time author, who has a ready wit, quips that if this book is successful, he'll write more.

McCauley has spent hours and hours at the main library researching his book, using, he says, the same microfilm he used 40 years ago.

McCauley has been a part of Quincy politics since 1964 when he was elected

FRANK MCCAULEY

Ward 1 councillor. He was sworn in as mayor on Jan. 4, 1982 and served for four terms. He also held a seat on the school committee.

In celebration of springtime and the Fourth Annual National Poetry month, Elizabeth Carter Torrey will read poems of the seasons and Joanne Cavatorta will play the harp on Wednesday, April 14 at 2 p.m. at the Adams Shore Branch Library.

Torrey is a poet and former librarian who gives readings in retirement and assisted living communities, schools, bookstores, and art centers as well as in libraries.

ies. In addition, she convenes poetry circles at Hingham's Old Ship Church for the four great seasonal crossing times. Her first book of poems was recently published.

Torrey and Cavatorta have collaborated in various community settings for several years.

An introductory program on basic web navigation and searching techniques using Netscape Navigator and the Thomas Crane Public Library web site, will also be offered during National Library Week.

The program will be held at the North Quincy Branch Library, 381 Hancock St., on Thursday, April 15 from 10:30 a.m. to noon and repeated Wednesday, April 21, from 7 to 8:30 p.m.

Participation is limited to six adults at each session and registration is required. Register in person at the branch library or call 376-1320. The program is a demonstration only. All library locations have computers available for hands-on practice during open hours.

LEAKING SUSPICIONS

There are several reasons why your car and its cooling system is in the best condition. Our team at LEO If you have not changed the coolant at & WALT'S SUMOCO has named it the recommended intervals, the antifreeze can become corrosive enough to eat through the radiator's innards. Beyond that, the cumulative effects of normal shaking and vibration can create separations between parts that are held together by virtue of solder, epoxy, or crimps. And, it stands to reason that the thermal forces associated with engine heating and cooling can take a toll on stressed areas. Leaks can also be caused by compressed sealing gaskets that allow coolant to slip by. Whatever the reason, a radiator leak should be investigated immediately and a decision should be made to either repair or replace the radiator.

HINT: In older, rear-drive cars with weak engine mounts, it is possible that the engine may lurch forward under hard braking just enough for the engine-mounted fan to contact the radiator and cause damage.

Chimneys And Vents Need Annual Inspections

Like 58 percent of American households today, Suzanne Johnson of Seattle, Wash., heats her home with a natural gas furnace. She also has a gas insert installed in her masonry fireplace for quick evening fires.

But it wasn't until recently that Johnson discovered she still needs to have her home's chimney and vents inspected regularly--despite the fact that she no longer has traditional fires in her fireplace.

When Johnson stopped burning wood, she thought she was getting away from chimney maintenance. What she didn't realize was that virtually any gas heating system--whether it's a furnace, a fireplace insert, a log set or a gas stove--relies on either a chimney or a vent to direct carbon monoxide outside the house. One of her biggest concerns, of course, is the danger of carbon monoxide poisoning.

A blocked or damaged chimney, or an obstructed or leaky venting system, can cause carbon monoxide to seep into a home unnoticed. Sometimes it can be as simple as a bird's nest stuck in a chimney or a buildup of leaves in a vent that can interfere with proper ventilation.

That's why the Chimney Safety Institute of America (CSIA) urges homeowners to be sure their gas heating systems and gas heating systems and gas hearth products--including both natural and propane--are venting properly before the heating season begins.

"We recommend an annual inspection of the chimney and vents by a CSIA Certified Chimney Sweep to help reduce the chance of carbon monoxide poisonings," said George Kapheim, executive director of CSIA. "Carbon monoxide is an odorless, tasteless, colorless gas that can kill. And because there may be no smoke with gas appliances, the presence of carbon monoxide is virtually unseen."

At low levels, carbon monoxide can cause dizziness, fatigue, headache, nausea and irregular breathing--common symptoms that can be misdiagnosed as a cold or the flu. Left undetected, carbon monoxide can lead to more serious health problems such as loss of consciousness, brain damage, heart irregularity, muscle weakness, miscarriage and even death.

When a certified chimney sweep performs an inspection on the chimney and vents of a gas heating system, they first look for visible signs that indicate potential problems with carbon monoxide levels in the home. These include moisture on the windows and black streaks on walls around registers or baseboard radiators. After the visual inspection, the certified sweep performs a battery of tests that indicate if

Thanks for thinking of us first!

Dear customers and friends:

In a recent Vancouver-Washington based survey of households throughout Southeastern Massachusetts, people were asked the following question? "When you think of a Realtor, who do you think of first?" The number one answer was Jack Conway.

The survey called it "TOMA" -- Top of Mind Awareness, and like Crest for toothpaste, and Campbells for soup, Conway has it for real estate. I guess that means we've done something right in this business for the past 41 years.

Thanks, folks, and when you're buying or selling real estate, we hope you'll continue to think of us first.

Sincerely,

Jack Conway

Wall-Raising Ceremony Saturday At Habitat Village Neighborhood

A wall-raising ceremony, signifying the official start of construction of a second duplex as part of South Shore Habitat for Humanity's Granite Village neighborhood in Quincy, will be held Saturday, April 10 at 104-110 Bower Rd.

The first three families are settling into their homes, and the first duplex is nearing completion. Saturday's wall-raising of the second duplex will launch construction of the second duplex, the future home of two families who have been waiting since being selected as Habitat partners last summer.

Two very different groups are helping to sponsor this duplex. Inspired by a grant from the Wal-Mart Foundation, employees of the Quincy Wal-Mart store, which is located next door to Granite Village, have pledged to volunteer their labor and raise money through the sale of Habitat merchandise and other activities.

Also, five churches in Milton have come together to form South Shore Habitat's first interfaith sponsor of this project. The five churches -- First Congregational, First Parish (Unitarian Universalist), St. Michael's Episcopal, St. Agatha's (Catholic) and East Congregational -- have set a fund-raising goal of $32,500 and will also be contributing volunteers to work on construction of the two-family home.

South Shore Habitat for Humanity is a non-profit, ecumenical Christian ministry dedicated to building simple, decent houses in partnership with families in need. This is not a giveaway program. Families become Habitat homeowners based on income, housing need and willingness to perform 500 hours of "sweat equity."

Selected families buy the completed homes at cost with a long-term no interest mortgage from South Shore Habitat, and their monthly payments are used to help build future homes.

The public is invited to attend Saturday's wall-raising ceremony.

Chimneys And Vents Need Annual Inspections

there are problems--or potential problems--which could cause the chimney or vents to malfunction.

In addition to having the chimney and vents inspected and maintained, the CSIA also recommends that furnaces and hearth products be serviced according to the manufacturer's instructions. Because gas water heaters also need proper ventilation they, too, should be inspected according to the manufacturer's instructions.

Service on these gas appliances should be performed by the company that handled the installation.

Another way to protect against carbon monoxide is to make sure that a home is equipped with a UL-listed carbon monoxide detector. While a carbon monoxide detector can alert a homeowner to the presence of carbon monoxide, an annual inspection helps prevent carbon monoxide poisonings.

According to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety

Commission, in 1994 there were 118 deaths and 3,100 injuries due to carbon monoxide poisonings caused by gas heating appliances. And that number does not include victims who were either misdiagnosed or did not seek medical attention.

Established in 1983, CSIA is a non-profit, educational institution, dedicated to educating the public about the prevention of chimney system hazards.

CSIA Certified Chimney Sweeps have earned the industry's most respected credential by passing a written examination based on fire codes, clearances and standards for the construction and maintenance of chimneys and venting systems.

For copies of informational brochures on chimney safety and carbon monoxide, or for a list of CSIA Certified Chimney Sweeps in your area, call 1-800-536-0118 or write to CSIA, 8752 Robbins, Indianapolis, IN 46268.

SPOTLIGHT ON HEALTH & FITNESS

Quincy Hospital Providing Free Clinic

Quincy Hospital is offering free episodic care for adults without insurance at the Southwest Community Center, 338 Granite St., Quincy, every Monday from 4 to 7 p.m. Episodic care helps people who have minor health concerns such as rashes, sprains, or the flu, or who are in need of a simple physical or a blood pressure check. Major injuries such as broken bones or those requiring stitches need to be treated in a hospital emergency room.

Christine Cadegan, MSN, NPC, a nurse practitioner and program director of Quincy Hospital's Occupational Health Services, notified the need for this type of service in the community and suggested the idea to hospital administrators. Together they worked to establish a program to provide free care to those in need.

The clinic is seeking volunteers to give a few hours of time helping answering telephones and greeting patients entering the clinic. If you are interested in volunteering or would like more information about the Quincy Hospital free care clinic, call (617) 376-5506.

New Pre-Natal Program AT YMCA

The South Shore YMCA is offering a newly revised pre-natal program with an eight-week spring session beginning Tuesday, April 13.

This is a medically approved exercise program for (NAPS)—Americans know the health benefits of regular exercise, but don't do it as much as they should, according to a new national survey from the Center for Sports Medicine at Penn State University and the American Egg Board. Over 70 percent of respondents cited "too tired" or "lack of energy" as key reasons they skip exercising.

Nationally renowned sports nutritionist, Kristine Clark, Ph.D., R.D., says there is a solution to this "fitness paradox": food. According to Dr. Clark, the Director of Sports Nutrition at The Pennsylvania State University, people don't always think of their diet as a reason they lack energy. Yet, she says, changing what you eat and when you eat could be the solution to meeting fitness goals.

"It's important to remember that energy = calories," explains Dr. Clark. "Whether you're a serious athlete or just trying to stay in shape, eating nutrient-rich foods such as eggs, whole grains, fruits, vegetables and low-fat dairy products can help fuel energy and give that extra push needed to get up and exercise."

For optimal energy, Dr. Clark recommends eating a 100-200 calorie snack that is rich in protein and carbohydrates, 60 minutes before exercising. Following are some pre-workout snack suggestions from Dr. Clark, which include foods that fuel the body:

If you exercise in the morning: Try eating half a bagel with a slice of low-fat cheese or peanut butter on toast

If you exercise at lunch time: Plan a mid-morning snack of low-fat yogurt with fruit or a hard-cooked egg and orange juice

If you exercise after work/in the evening: Take a 4 o'clock break to eat half an egg salad sandwich or a glass of low-fat milk and a piece of fruit

Dr. Clark believes that understanding how food choices affect energy levels and endurance makes it much easier to maintain a daily fitness routine that will improve health and quality of life.

For more information, write for a free brochure, "Foods That Fuel: Eating Your Way to Fitness," by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to the American Egg Board, Department Q, Box 1214, Park Ridge, IL 60068.

Early Referral Could Save Your Life

(NAPS)—Studies show that people who receive early referral to a specialist have higher survival rates. A statewide study in Pennsylvania revealed that heart attack patients treated by specialists had a 26 percent lower mortality rate than those treated only by primary care physicians.

If you have two or more of these symptoms—dizziness, shortness of breath, palpitations or fainting—and have had a heart attack, see your physician immediately. Ask if a referral to a heart rhythm specialist is right for you.

Consider this example: Six months before his 62nd birthday, Arnie experienced spells of dizziness and felt like his heart was racing, causing shortness of breath. He even fainted once for no apparent reason. Because his father had died from cardiac arrest, Arnie made an appointment with his family doctor.

"These could be symptoms of a heart rhythm problem," the doctor said. "I want you to see an electrophysiologist. That's a cardiologist specially trained in heart rhythm disorders. He has tests to determine the problem and best treatment. It's good you came in right away."

Arnie saw the electrophysiologist and learned he had an abnormally fast heart rhythm, a potentially life-threatening condition called tachycardia.

"The reason you passed out is because you had an episode of rapid heart beats," the specialist said. "You were lucky."

"I recommend a small implantable defibrillator," he said. "Recent studies show that patients with your condition who have defibrillators live longer than those on heart rhythm medications. If your heart beats too fast, the defibrillator automatically senses it and corrects the heartbeat. It's like having an emergency room in your chest."

Two months later, just before retirement, Arnie's heart began beating too fast, becoming chaotic and irregular. He passed out while walking alone in the woods, but the defibrillator stopped the rapid pulses. Arnie's heartbeat was normal within seconds. A follow-up visit confirmed that he had an episode of ventricular fibrillation. Had it not been for the life-saving therapy of the implantable device, Arnie would have died within minutes. Instead, he is enjoying retirement.

For additional information on heart rhythm disorders, check the American Heart Association website at www.americanheart.org.

SPRING CAR CARE

Emission Testing Targets 'Drive It 'Til It Dies'

(NAPS)—The idea of driving an aging car until it dies without sinking another dollar into it is no longer an option in many parts of the U.S., due to stricter emission standards for older vehicles.

According to the National Automotive Parts Association (NAPA), vehicle owners should get an annual engine performance evaluation to lower the risk of failing mandatory emission tests. This evaluation should be performed by an ASE-certified (Automotive Service Excellence) technician.

As a result of the 1990 Clean Air Act, many states and metropolitan areas have recently implemented new or enhanced emission inspection and maintenance programs. A passing grade on these tests is mandatory before a vehicle can be registered. The older the vehicle, the more pollutants it tends to emit. The average age of a vehicle in the U.S. is now 8.5 years, the oldest it's been in more than 40 years.

NAPA also advises consumers to become familiar with the following "Symptoms Checklist," which details the signs of a poorly tuned engine:

- "Rotten egg," fuel or gas odor
- Poor fuel mileage
- Lacks power (sluggish)
- Idles rough
- Excessive black, blue or white smoke
- Stalls when slowing or stopping

If any of these driveability symptoms exist, NAPA recommends that consumers take their vehicles into a repair shop that offers ASE-certified technicians and a national warranty program guaranteeing its parts and labor.

NAPA also recommends that consumers regularly make sure that their hoses are in good condition and that their gas caps fit tightly, because a high percentage of emissions result from fuel, gasoline, and vapors that escape from the fuel tank and carburetor.

According to NAPA's Director of Technical Services, Jim Kiple, "If an engine has running problems, the amount of pollutants released by it increases. This is why proper maintenance is so critical. A poorly tuned engine can also make the emission-control system ineffective. And in some cases, a poorly tuned engine can damage the emission-control devices."

Safety Tips For Wet Weather Driving

(NAPS)—Few, if any, drivers take a shine to rainy-weather driving. Wet weather not only makes road surfaces slippery, it can dramatically reduce visibility. This can make driving stressful and hazardous. Here, from the experts, are some foul-weather driving tips that can help make your next trip in the rain safer:

- At the first sign of rain, put your lights on. This will help other drivers see you better.

- Slow down. On wet roads drivers should keep extra distance between themselves and the car ahead of them.
- Check your windshield wipers. Over time, blades lose their effectiveness because of substances such as road grime and salt that build up on the surface of the blade. The result? Ineffective, chattering wipers that leave the windshield streaked and smeared.

Surprisingly, despite the risks, most motorists don't replace their wiper blades as often as they should, say the experts at Prestone Products Corporation. One of the reasons for this is that although drivers feel concerned about poor wiper blade performance during a rainstorm, it's all too easy to forget it when the sun starts to shine.

However, there are some new ways to keep a driver's vision clear when driving in rain. According to car experts, using a wiper blade restorer regularly can extend the life of wiper blades. A product such as Prestone Wiper Blade Restorer can help stop blade chattering, squeaking and windshield streaking caused by a built-up layer of oxidation and road grime.

Happily, making sure you have good visibility in bad weather does not have to be time-consuming or expensive. To put yourself on the

Adams Historical Park To Open Season April 19

On Patriot's Day, April 19, the Adams National Historical Park will open for its 1999 season.

Twelve acres and 11 historic structures comprise the site, and six of these historic buildings will be open for tours — the Birthplaces of President John Adams and John Quincy Adams, the "Old House," the Stone Library and the 1873 Carriage House.

The United First Parish Church, where Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams and their wives, Abigail Adams and Louisa Catherine Adams are entombed, will not be open this year due to lack of funds. The church with its active congregation is not part of the national park.

April 19 also marks the beginning of National Park Week, which commemorates the legacy of the National Park Service and its mission to protect America's common heritage. Throughout the week, park admission will be free.

On Sunday, April 25, a special Patriot's Day celebration will be held at the Adams Birthplaces on Franklin Street.

"This is a family day where participants can relive the times of John and Abigail Adams," said John Stanwich, a National Park Service ranger.

Someone will be on hand to cut out silhouettes, which was typical at the time, and another park ranger, Karen Yourell, dressed in period garb, will demonstrate candlemaking. Youngsters will try their hand at writing with a quill pen, said Stanwich.

In addition, individuals costumed as Revolutionary War soldiers will display muskets and Continental Army currency, and someone will be on hand to discuss a soldier's life. The Middlesex Regiment, a rifle and drum unit, is tentatively scheduled to be on hand, Stanwich added.

The Adams National Historical Park, established in 1946, commemorates the distinguished men and women in the Adams family who dedicated their lives to the development and service of the United States.

From April 19 through Nov. 10, the park is open seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Visitors must register for tours at the Visitor Center at 1250 Hancock St. in the Presidents Place Galleria. A trolley leaves from the visitor center every 30 minutes, visiting the birthplaces first, then the "Old House," before returning to the center.

Tour space is limited and is filled on a first come, first served basis. For further information, call the visitor center at (617) 770-1175.

First Parish Church Open To Tourists By Appointment

By MARILYN JACKSON

The Church of the Presidents, officially known as the United First Parish Church, Unitarian, will not be open to tourists seven days a week this year due to lack of funds.

As reported in the Quincy Sun last February, the Rev. Sheldon Bennett, minister, said the church was in dire straits and would be unable to finance the peripheral costs of utilities, maintenance, building security and additional personnel to handle admission fees.

At the time he was optimistic that donors would come forward to help finance those costs.

The National Park Service would have provided a ranger or trained volunteer to lead tourists through the historically and architecturally significant church and the crypt which contains the tombs of Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams and their wives, Abigail Adams and Louisa Catherine Adams.

Bennett said Tuesday that Mayor James Sheets had been helpful in the past to raise private funds during the past several years. "But it has become increasingly difficult," said Bennett. "You can't go back to the same sources."

Initially, Bennett estimated it would cost the parish $70,000 to be open to the public both this year and next between April 19 and

Nov. 10, the day before Veterans' Day.

Although he has been able to pare down some of the costs to a net total of about $15,000, the church needs to do some capital improvements to accommodate the tourists, such as sprucing up the lobby of the church as well as the crypt.

However, he said the church would be open to group tours by advance reservation. A group tour could be arranged between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. Monday through Thursday by calling at least two or three days in advance.

This week Bennett announced that the church had engaged a general contractor for the restoration and repairs at the church.

Originally, the church had planned to replace the slate roof, but upon further examination, officials learned that the eight roof trusses supporting the roof and domed ceiling were overstressed and one showed a fracture.

During the past year, the Massachusetts Historical Commission has awarded the church three matching grants totaling $235,000 to undertake the repairs. To complete the work, nearly another $500,000 must be raised.

Hired as general contractor for the estimated $763,429 project is the Varco Corporation of Quincy, headed by Laurie Ricciardi, wife of Paul Ricciardi.

Bennett said the Ricciardis during the 1980s had worked primarily in historic restoration and masonry work, including projects at the Lowell National Heritage Park and at the Children's Museum on Congress Street.

In more recent years the Ricciardis had branched out into commercial development and built President's Place and 10 Granite Street in Quincy as well as several other projects. Like many other real estate developers, the Ricciardi family sustained huge financial losses.

Bennett said the church also hired Zennon Iron Works of Easton to fabricate the necessary 16 steel trusses which will be erected on either side of the original trusses that support the roof and stunning plaster dome ceiling.

To comply with the state grants, the truss work must be completed by June 30, he said.

The costs to replace the slate roof and install copper gutters and downspouts will total about $250,000, he added, but a contract for that work will depend on the church's ability to raise additional funds, he said.

Quincy Native Documents History Spencer Says Baseball Group Greeted Warmly In Havana

By TOM HENSHAW

When the Baltimore Orioles visited Havana the other day to play the Cuban national baseball team, Ted Spencer, who grew up in Quincy, went along as a sort of "staff historian."

"I was documenting history," said Spencer, who is curator of the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y.

"How many times do we look back at baseball history and wish we had a chance to record it in a systematic way with witnesses and on-the-spot accounts."

"Who knows, maybe 50 years from now we'll learn that the game had some significance in opening diplomatic relations between the two countries."

Why not? Why couldn't baseball be to Cuba what ping pong was in the opening of China to the West?

Spencer said the group, which included Commissioner Bud Selig and Red Sox GM Dan Duquet, was treated warmly by the Cuban people and had few if any restrictions placed on their visit.

"A bus met us at the airport and took us to the hotel," he said. "After that, for the most part, we were on our own. But we didn't have time to do much. We had to make sure we were at the briefings and press conferences."

He brought back several items for the Hall of Fame, among them the jersey worn by the Orioles starting pitcher, Scott Erickson; the bat used by B. J. Surhoff to get the first Orioles' hit; and Baltimore's lineup card.

Spencer saw three baseball games in the four days he was on the Caribbean island. Two games in the Cuban world series between Havana and Santiago de Cuba and, of course, the game between the Orioles and the Cuban nationals.

The Orioles won, 3-2, on an 11th inning single by Harold Baines as the highlight of the first visit to the Communist island by a major league team in 40 years.

The Cubans impressed Spencer with their abilities on the diamond.

"They don't hit many home runs but they do everything else well," he said. "Baines' single that won the game was barely missed by their shortstop. The Cubans were happy with their performance."

One player, Omar Linares, the Cuban third baseman who has won five batting titles in the island league, particularly impressed Spencer.

"He has a lifetime batting average of .377," he said. "He's right up there in home runs, too."

Linares tied the game at 2-2 with a single in the eighth inning.

"He came up again in the 10th with a chance to win the game," said Spencer. "But I think he was trying too hard to hit a home run. He popped out."

During the game, Spencer sat about 20 feet from where Fidel Castro watched the game with Commissioner Selig and Orioles' owner Peter Angelo, but he didn't meet the Cuban dictator.

"He just met with the Orioles," he said. "But he was enthusiastic about the game. He took the final score in stride."

Spencer said he spent a lot of his free time talking to just plain people in the streets of Havana.

"All they wanted to talk about was baseball," he said. "They are crazy for baseball."

"I remember as a kid playing in Merrymount Park and in the vacant lots off Fenno St., where we lived. It's still like that in Havana."

In every lot, they're playing catch or a game of baseball."

Spencer, the son of retired Quincy Police Officer Bill Spencer, who now lives in Florida, played Little League baseball in Quincy, but his career ended as a teenager in the Patriot Ledger carrier boys' league. He went to Archbishop Williams High.

The Cuban players, who make as little as $15 a month, did not express a desire to play in the majors, where yearly salaries range in the millions of dollars.

"Not openly, anyway," said Spencer. "But they had a problem with some of the things the players who defected have been saying about Cuban baseball. They said they should not put down the Cuban baseball system because it made them what they are."

Away from the ball field at Estadio Latinoamericano, Spencer found Havana to be a "sad place."

"You can see what the city used to be," he said. "The fine homes of yesterday have deteriorated since the state took them over. They have resurrected some of them as banks and stores."

"It's like a jewel waiting to be polished."

"The Cuban people themselves are very warm, very open and they're starving. There's no such thing as a fat Cuban. They're led to believe that it's the American embargo that keeps them poor."

The Orioles and the Cubans will meet in a second game in Baltimore in the first week in May and Spencer hopes the meetings on the playing field will become an annual thing.

"I hope we can set up a cultural exchange between Havana and Cooperstown," he said.

Youth Sports Lecturer At Central Middle School April 12

Bob Bigelow, an expert on the needs of children in youth sports, will speak Monday, April 12 at 8 p.m. at Central Middle School.

Bigelow, who will discuss adult involvement in organized youth sports, is one of the foremost lecturers in the country regarding the needs of children in youth sports, and using common-sense approaches to meet those needs.

The forum is sponsored by The Law Offices of Spillane & Epstein, P.C.

Bigelow is a former NBA first round draft choice and four-year player. He played collegiately at the University of Pennsylvania for Hall of Fame coach Chuck Daly. He has devoted several thousand hours researching and lecturing about organized youth sports and its effects on children—and adults.

Since 1992, Bigelow has conducted more than 300 talks throughout the Northeast. He was introduced to Quincy two years ago when he spoke at the Bernazzani School. His talk has been played many times on Quincy Access Cable, and has been enthusiastically received.

Bigelow's talk is educational, challenging, motivational and humorous. "The best talk I've ever heard on any subject," said one listener. "I recommend to anyone who deals with the youth of America to spend one hour with Bob Bigelow," said another. "You are guaranteed to leave with a better understanding of what children really want and need from their athletic activities."

Bigelow's mission to put "youth" back in "youth sports" has received widespread media attention, including The Christian Science Monitor, Providence Journal, New England Sports Network and New England Cable News.

"As an adult involved in youth sports, ask yourself two questions: 'Why do my kids play?' and 'What are my motivations for being involved, or not?'" said David Spillane of Spillane and Epstein.

"Whether you are satisfied, or uncomfortable, with your answers, please attend this thought-provoking forum. It delivers the crucial message that adults involved in youth sports must hear."

North Quincy Begins Season With 11-8 Win

With a large part of the team that went to the Division 1 Eastern Massachusetts finals last year, North Quincy started the season off on the right foot with an 11-8 win at Canton Monday afternoon in a non-league game.

Junior right hander Matt McCann was the starter and pitched 5 innings, giving up only 2 earned runs while striking out 4. Outfielder Kevin Walsh went 2-2 with a pair of triples and a sacrifice fly that accounted for 5 Red Raider runs.

Junior first baseman Rob Celata was 3-4 with a run batted in and 3 runs scored. John Gavin was 1 for 2 and executed a perfect squeeze that scored a North run.

Adam Goodrich was 2 for 4 and Chris Walsh was

BASEBALL

1 for 3. Brian Deptula pitched a perfect 6th inning and Rob Celata struck out two in the 7th inning to get the save.

Coach Larry Taglieri, who took the helm only six weeks ago after Dave Perdios moved on to take the job as coach at Curry College in Milton, said he was very familiar with the athletes who came out for the team. "This team has very high expectations for this year and they're working hard." North will have good pitching in Rob Celata, Matt McCann, sophomore lefty Pete Doherty and right-hander Kevin Walsh, Brian Deptula and Joe Flynn.

In the outfield will be Pete Doherty, Chris Walsh, Flynn, Mike Keddy, freshman Pat Bregoli and Brian Walsh.

In the infield, Coach Taglieri will have John Gavin and T.J. Bell at third, senior Chris Bregoli at short, senior Adam Goodrich at second and Deptula and James Mateuj at first. Bill O'Toole and Deptula will share the catching duties.

After getting his first win under his belt, Coach Taglieri said, "it's great to get it out of the way, but we have a lot of work to do this season."

Quincy Opens Against Braintree

By CHARLES ROSS

A very young Quincy High baseball team took the field yesterday in a home game against Braintree in a non-league game.

Coach Bob Sylvia will be looking for leadership from his small group of experienced players.

Seniors Dennis Palardi will pitch and play 3rd base, Nathan DeRosario will be the leftfielder and Joe Tower will split duties as a pitcher and a first baseman.

According to Sylvia, "The Old Colony league is such a good baseball league, you get no breaks in the schedule that would favor an inexperienced team. We have a great group of student athletes who will get better as the season goes along and will become a stronger opponent for the teams we play as the season progresses."

Quincy has taken a new approach to help bring along the underclassmen by holding practices for all 3-baseball teams (varsity, JV and freshmen at the same time on the same field on Pond Street.)

This gives the athletes the benefit of working with the entire coaching staff at the same time and hopefully accelerate the pace of players stepping up to the varsity baseball team for the Presidents.

Talent From 400 Key For North Quincy Spring Track

Talent from the 400 will be the strong suit of the North Quincy High School girls spring track team, says head coach Geoff Hennessy.

"We've got some more help in the longer races, but our lack of depth in sprints and jumps will hurt us against the 'Big 3' (Falmouth, Silver Lake and Bridgewater-Raynham.) The throwers are improving steadily. Come to the OCL's (May 18) we should be pretty strong. It'll be fun to see how our big crop of freshmen develop."

Hennessy, who begins his 11th year as head track coach, said athletes to watch include Kellie Conley (400), Kellyrose O'Brien (400), Maureen Holleran (javelin), Lynda Wilson (two-mile), Kellie Johnston (100, 200, longjump, relays) and the 4x400 relay: Conley, O'Brien, Johnston, Lahar or Lacey.

Seniors Kellie Johnston and Liz Bennett will serve as co-captains this year. Returning letterman include Kellie Conley, Maureen Holleran, Sarah Houghton, Kellie Johnston, Colleen Lahal, Liz Leuchte, Jackie Murphy, Linda Nguyen, Genevieve O'Brien, Kellyrose O'Brien, Ellen Tang, Lynda Wilson and Lena Yuen.

Other returning veterans are Ellen Blaney, Lisa Chow, Melissa McKenna, Amy Fagerlund and Melissa Griffin.

Incoming freshmen are Diana Berberan, Natalie Caron, Samantha Chaisson, Kara Cheesman, Meghan Haines, Beth Houghton, Alison Lacey, Katherine Markhard, Laura Matos, Sherri McCusker, Katelyn McDonald, Rachel Silverman, Lauren Sleeth and Laura Wells.

Others news to spring track team are juniors Meghan Ginty, Caitlin O'Donnell and Charlene Cote.

Assistant coaches are Maureen Fallon and Sherrin Gallagher.

St. Joseph's Blue Devils Conference Champions

By ROBERT CERASOLI

Do you believe in miracles? Well, the team and fans of St. Joseph's School in Quincy Point sure do.

North Quincy High School was loaded with excitement as the St. Joseph's Blue Devils battled their way through a fierce game to win the Eastern Mass. Parochial School Conference Championship.

Boldly, where no other St. Joseph's team has gone before, the Blue Devils started their quest for the championship by beating St. Anthony's of Somerville with another "at the buzzer" victory. This win moved the Blue Devils forward, meeting another challenge and defeating St. Francis of Medford.

Then, the Blue Devils dished St. Mary's of Danvers for the conference title.

But this was no ordinary game, not by a long shot. The privileged who watched this game saw the Blue Devils team brilliantly coached by Head Coach Peter Ramponi and Assistant Coach George McQuinn.

In an unprecedented four-overtime game -- yes four -- the team of Matthew Ramponi, Kevin O'Connell, James McQuinn, Gary Thomas Jacobs, Josh Yellin, Saad Bhatti, Tony Pepdjonovic, Parker Scott, Alex Smith, Michael Capano and Brian Sweeney took home the gold celebrating their 75-73 victory.

The game was exciting and magnificently played. No one would doubt that this was the best basketball game they had every seen at any level.

The Blue Devils played with their hearts and souls. They played as a team that would not be defeated and win no matter how long it would take.

Matthew Ramponi started out the game with an amazing three-pointer and led the team with great basketball skills. Kevin O'Connell played flawlessly making what seemed to be radar driven baskets to put the team into their third overtime.

Saad Bhatti pulled through with his outside shots to tie the game for one of the overtimes. James McQuinn moved the ball down the court with his superb passing and spider-like tactics, outwitting the opposition.

Tony Pepdjonovic helped his team with his "nothing but net" foul shots and gave the team another overtime. As always, Josh Yellin and Gary Thomas Jacobs made gritty rebounds tearing up the boards and played to win. Parker Scott played tremendously with his great offensive tactics.

It was incredible to see how this team consistently came through in tough situations. They headed to Springfield with another round of games for the New England title.

Surely it will prove to be an amazing adventure! Good luck St. Joseph's Blue Devils.

Brian Morrissey To Compete In State Geography Bee

Brian Morrissey of Wollaston, an eighth grade student at Sacred Heart School, will represent the school at the state level of the National Geographic Society's National Geography Bee Friday, April 9 at Clark University in Worcester.

quarters in Washington, D.C., on May 25 and 26.

An honor roll student co-editor of the student yearbook at Sacred Heart School, Morrissey is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Morrissey of Wollaston. He plans to attend Xavierian Brothers High School in Westwood in the fall.

Until Runway Questions Answered Council Asks FAA To Hold Back On Logan Airport Funds

By MARILYN JACKSON

The City Council unanimously voted to ask the Federal Aviation Administration to withdraw its support for the $25 million expansion of Logan Airport at least until the questions of neighboring communities have been answered in better detail.

The first of two public hearings before the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act unit regarding the construction of Runway 14/32, a 5,000-foot-long unidirectional runway at the southern end of the airport, was scheduled at 6:30 p.m. last night (Wednesday) at the State Transportation Building, 10 Park Plaza, Boston.

A second hearing at the Holiday Inn in East Boston was slated at 6:30 p.m. tonight (Thursday).

The expansion, which also includes adding a center taxiway, is designed to reduce delays and allow operations during northwest winds.

"I think we'll have more clout if the entire City Council supports this resolution," said Ward 6 Councillor Bruce Ayers, who also serves as one of Quincy's three state representatives.

Ayers and Ward 4 Councillor Michael D'Amico co-sponsored the resolution.

The addition of more air traffic over the city is unacceptable, and the Council "strongly urges that the transportation and environmental needs of the metropolitan Boston area be reviewed in a much broader scope" than Massport's current proposal, the councillors agreed.

Councillor-at-large Paul Harold said that the resolution puts Quincy in line with other communities surrounding the airport.

"Quincy is an impacted community, just as is Boston and Chelsea. We realize the value of the airport, but there is a need for a second airport, particularly for cargo and smaller aircraft," Harold said.

"The airport cannot expand further in the city," said Harold. He said the only airport within another city in the world was in Hong Kong, which has been closed.

D'Amico said residents in West Quincy already are impacted by aircrafts flying over the area, particularly around Ricciuti Drive. "We've been fighting this battle for many years, and [the proposed runway] will impact directly on the quality of life of residents in West Quincy and North Quincy," he said.

Residents in Germantown and Houghs Neck will be affected too, added

Council President Peter Kolson. "The proposed runway will increase air traffic tenfold," he said.

The council agreed to send the resolution not only to Jane Garvey, administrator of the FAA, but to Peter Blute, executive director of Massport, Betty Desrosiers, Massport's director of aviation planning, to Quincy's legislative delegation, U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, and Marie Stamos of Squantum, a member of the Coalition Against Runway Expansion (CARE).

In Ayers' resolution, he noted that Massport predicts a significant increase in overall air traffic takeoffs and landings during the next five years and that delays will still be an issue even if the runway is built.

All the councillors were piqued that Massport has not offered to hold any local meetings to explain this project to Quincy residents and listen to their concerns about air traffic noise and air pollution.

A copy of Massport's environmental impact report is on file at the Thomas Crane Public Library. Written comments regarding the runway proposal must be submitted to MEPA, attention Arthur Pugsley, EOE, No. 10458, 100 Cambridge St., 20th Floor, Boston 02202, before April 23.

Rev. David White To Celebrate Televised Mass Sunday

Rev. David White, a parochial vicar at Sacred Heart Church, North Quincy, will celebrate a televised Mass on Sunday, April 11 at 7:30 a.m. on WHDH-TV Channel 7.

FR. DAVID WHITE

The Sunday Mass is aired weekly from Channel 7's studio in conjunction with Boston Catholic Television (BCTV). An estimated three million viewers watch the program each Sunday. It is the longest running continuous live program in history, airing every Sunday since Jan. 1, 1955.

Fr. White was ordained May 21, 1994, his mother's 70th birthday and shares the same anniversary ordination as Bernard Cardinal Law, archbishop of Boston. A native of Dorchester, Fr. White's road to the priesthood is unlike most men who wear the collar.

After attending Catholic Memorial High School, he joined the U.S. Marine Corps, then spent 11 years in the Boston Police Department, the last five as a detective, prior to entering Pope John XXIII Seminary in Weston.

He calls his experience in law enforcement, "the best preparation to be a priest."

"There are numerous similarities between the two jobs -- both wear uniforms; the church and rectory are equivalent to the police station and court house," Fr. White said. "In both you see what evil, like drugs and alcohol, can do to people and you hear people's secrets and confessions."

Fr. White has been at Sacred Heart since June 1996 after serving at St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Bridgewater. Growing up on the other side of the Neponset River Bridge, he said, "I jumped at the opportunity to come here. I am a city guy and I feel at home here."

Sacred Heart is a very active parish, with a school that has an enrollment of 450 boys and girls in grades K-8. Students from the school and the parish's religious education program makes up the junior choir. Under the direction of organist and music director Howard Lotis, the junior choir will provide Fr. White musical accompaniment for the Sunday Mass on Channel 7.

Fr. White previously celebrated BCTV's Daily Mass, which airs Monday through Friday at 9:30 a.m. from Cardinal Law's residence on Channel 68 and BCTV Cable, but this will be his first appearance on the Sunday Mass.

"TV Masses are a positive use of modern technology to spread the word of God," Fr. White said. "If Saint Paul were alive today, he would be using the TV, radio and computers as well to tell the story of Jesus."

He has received letters and comments from viewers, many who are the elderly, sick and homebound, but also from young people he meets on the street who say they have seen him on television.

McDermott Zeros In On Abandoned Shopping Carts

A recent walk around his neighborhood has prompted Ward 3 Councillor Patrick McDermott to introduce a proposal that would reduce the number of abandoned shopping carts found throughout the city.

He said he counted 27 in a three- or four-block walk, including carts from Marshalls, Stop and Shop, Shaw's and K-Mart. "The closest K-Mart is the new one in Braintree," he said.

The matter was referred to the oversight committee which has been asked to make recommendations to the council no later than May 17. McDermott asked that the public works department, the licensing board and any other interested persons submit comments or suggestions to the oversight committee no later than April 30.

McDermott in a resolution stated that the unauthorized removal of shopping carts from a shopping outlet is considered stealing and abandoned carts can obstruct sidewalks and streets, creating a public nuisance.

He suggested creating a city-sponsored program through the public works department to remove and dispose of the carts and creating an ordinance prohibiting the removal of the carts which would carry a fine on the retail establishment and on the individual who removes the cart.

A special license could be issued by the license board which a retail operation could obtain if it chooses to allow shopping carts outside its premises.

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymond said some senior citizens use the carts from Shaw's to take their bundles home to Martinson Street. Other handicapped individuals use the carts to assist their mobility. "We must be sensitive to them," he said. "We have to strike a balance."

McDermott Asks Update On Public Works Projects

Ward 3 Councillor Patrick McDermott has asked that Public Works Commissioner David Colton update the councillors on present and future public works projects using Chapter 90 funds.

McDermott said he was concerned that the governor has proposed cuts in a transportation bond bill filed in February that could impact the city's road improvement program.

"I'm concerned that some of our commitments may be jeopardized," he said. The public works committee will call a hearing on the matter.

OBITUARIES

Barry M. Goonan, 38 Member Of Teamsters, Lions Club

A funeral Mass for Barry M. Goonan, 38, of Houghs Neck, a member of the Lions Club and Teamsters Union Local 82, was celebrated March 29 at Most Blessed Sacrament Church, Houghs Neck.

Mr. Goonan died March 27 after a courageous battle with brain cancer.

A native of Galway, Ireland, he immigrated to the United States in 1988 and moved to Houghs Neck in 1993 when he fell in love with the neighborhood.

Mr. Goonan was a member of the Lions Club and the Teamsters Union Local 82. He was also a regular blood donor before his illness. He worked for Murphy Associates of Quincy since his arrival in the United States, and donated furniture and equipment to the local school and church through his work.

SCOTT DEWARE

A Thought For The Week

"Age is not measured by years. Nature does not equally distribute energy. Some people are born old and tired while others are going strong at 70." - Dorothy Thompson

The late Louis Armstrong, one of the greatest jazz musicians this country has ever produced, was once asked how he felt at being over 69 years old. He replied: "My belief and satisfaction is that, as long as a person breathes, they still have a chance to exercise the talents they were born with. There's no such thing as being 'on the way out' as long as you are doing something interesting and good. You are in business as long as you are breathing..." What a remarkable and sound philosophy...

A friend of mine, who at age 83, still maintains an active, busy schedule was asked why he virtually never reminisced about his more than 80 years of living. "No time for that," he replied. "Past experiences shouldn't be talked about. It should be put to good use. Take what you learned from the past and put it to work on tomorrow."

Isn't this what Louis Armstrong was talking about in his quote? Exercise the talents you were born with. Do something interesting and good each day, every day...

Evidence In Fatal Blast Still Being Analyzed

Evidence collected in the March 29 fatal blast claimed the life of 59-year-old Chawki Ibrahim at his home at 93 Standish Ave., Wollaston, is still being analyzed to determine what sort of device exploded, said a spokesman for Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating.

Powdery traces of TNT and other material were collected in the basement of the single-family, wood-frame house, according to Quincy Police Lt. Thomas Malvesti.

Although the material is similar to components found in a grenade, the device has not yet been confirmed as a grenade, despite other published reports, added David Traub, a spokesman for the district attorney.

The investigation of the blast is continuing, he said, adding that detectives are leaning away from the possibility that the device had been mailed to the Ibrahim home.

Mr. Ibrahim's cause of death was ruled due to lacerations to the heart and kidney by metallic shrapnel from a grenade which Mr. Ibrahim was holding at the time of the blast, police officials said.

Quincy police, along with State Troopers assigned to Keating's office, were working with agents from the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms as well as state fire marshal's office and the state police bomb squad to determine what caused the mysterious explosion and how Mr. Ibrahim had obtained the explosive device.

Quincy police received a 911 call at 6:38 p.m. March 29 from a family member who was upstairs in the house at the time. When police and firefighters arrived, they found Mr. Ibrahim lying outside a small woodworking shop in the basement. There appeared to be little damage.

Mr. Ibrahim had lived at 93 Standish Ave. for 11 years and had worked for Decore Upholstering Company on Harrison Avenue in Boston for several years.

He is survived by his wife, Zahra D. (Abouzeid) Ibrahim; nine children, George, Katia, Bernard, Deeb, Atta, Gabi and Tady, all of Quincy, Lidia Chehine of California and David Ibrahim of Weymouth; two brothers, two brothers, Nicholas Ibrahim and Tanous Ibrahim of Lebanon, and 10 grandchildren.

A memorial service for Mr. Ibrahim was conducted last Saturday at Our Lady of Cedars of Lebanon Maronite Catholic Church in Jamaica Plain.

Parking is available on the street and behind the building in the City Hall parking spaces. All events are free but reservations are suggested for the weekly activities.

Romano Indicted For Murder In Wife's Death

medical examiner ruled that Katherine Leonard Romano died from homicidal violence.

Investigators believe Romano killed his wife either Sept. 27 or Sept. 28 and dismembered her body with a heavy-duty saw he had borrowed from a neighbor.

Investigators alleged Romano then placed the body parts in trash bags for trash collection day and helped load the bags onto the truck Sept. 28. The bags are believed to have been incinerated.

For three months, Quincy and state police detectives interviewed dozens of people and searched for evidence regarding Mrs. Romano's disappearance. Their investigation took them to the Scituate wastewater treatment plant where Romano had worked briefly and to Plymouth to property owned by Romano's family and to a Bourne landfill.

The case broke open last December when the wife of the neighbor who loaned Romano the saw telephoned police about her suspicions.

According to her relatives, Mrs. Romano had given her husband a Sept. 30 deadline to move out of the Houghs Neck home they shared. Their 2-year-old son, Bruno, is now living out of state with his mother's relatives.

Ratification Vote Set April 27

Tentative Agreement In Teacher Talks

By MARILYN JACKSON

Negotiators for the teachers' union and for the city have reached a tentative agreement in principle for a four-year contract, after a 13-hour marathon bargaining session Monday.

The first part of the agreement deals with this school year, which is nearly over; the remainder of the contract extends for the next three years.

Now, it is up to the 760 members of the Quincy Education Association to ratify the proposed agreement.

OEA president Paul Phillips said a tentative date of April 27 has been set for the necessary two-thirds vote, but a time and place has not yet been established. He said the agreement must be formalized in writing and both sides sign it before it can be distributed to the membership.

"They will have the document before vacation," which begins Friday, said Phillips. "We're counting on them having it by Thursday. That's very short notice; it's hard on us," he said, commenting on the turnaround time to disseminate the proposed agreement.

Neither Phillips nor Mayor James Sheets, who serves as chairman of the school committee, would comment on the specifics of the agreement.

Asked whether the wage increases initially proposed are what is included in the tentative agreement, Phillips would not comment.

"I can't comment about the money proposal," said Phillips. "It's real tender. At 11:15 at night, we said I think we're done here, but we have to see it in writing," he said.

Asked whether he is optimistic that the teachers would ratify the agreement, he said that was a tough question. "I'm exhausted. I'm relieved."

"We need to explain [the agreement] to the members in a way to get them to vote for it by a two-thirds vote." He said the teachers also would be provided with a summary of the agreement.

Sheets said he was optimistic that the agreement would be ratified but also declined to comment on any differences between the proposed agreement and the initial offer. "It's very important that Mr. Phillips has an opportunity to present this [tentative agreement] to the union."

"The best course of action for me is to not make any comment until they have had a chance to look at it," he said.

He also declined to say what the financial impact the agreement would have on the city, stating only that the sum would be calculated after the teachers ratify the agreement.

Earlier, Sheets said all of the unions in the city were offered the same proposal: 0-2-0-3-0-4 over a three-year period, which means 0 percent for the first 6 months, followed by 2 percent for the remainder of the first year; 0 percent at the start of the second year, followed by 3 percent at six months; 0 percent at the start of the third year, followed by 4 percent.

The logo will reflect the city's past, present and a vision of the future.

Deadline for submitting entries is Monday, May 3.

They should be mailed to:

Tax Breaks Sought For Senior Citizens

By MARILYN JACKSON

House rich and cash poor can describe many senior citizens, not only in Quincy but throughout the state.

The economic boom and the soaring real estate values only exacerbate their financial situation.

This week, city councilors met with assessor board chairman Marion Fantuchio to discuss measures which could give the elderly some tax relief.

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi first proposed the home rule petition last December which would provide property tax relief to residents and renters who earn less than $20,000 a year. Those who earn over $40,000 annually would be ineligible, he suggested.

Describing the measure as a "circuit breaker," he said Boston has proposed a similar measure.

Diplomas Sought For World War II Veterans Who Left High School

The Veterans' Service Office wants to honor World War II Quincy veterans who left school before graduating to serve their country by presenting them with a high school diploma.

Hank Bradley, director of veterans' services, said he already has spoken to Mayor James Sheets and School Superintendent Eugene Creedon who welcomed the idea.

The school committee welcomed the idea.

A special ceremony would be held at Quincy High School and North Quincy High School to recognize those men and women who left school between Sept. 16, 1940, and Dec. 31, 1946, and went into the service, said Bradley. The ceremonies could be scheduled in May, and a reception would follow.

In order for a World War II veteran to receive a diploma, he/she must fill out an application with the pertinent service and military discharge record which then will be verified by the school.

Applications are available by calling the veterans' service office at (617) 376-1191 or stopping by at 45 High School Ave.

"Some [students] were in an accelerated program and were given their diplomas, but others just left school and never received a diploma," said Bradley.

A past commander of the Morrisette Legion Post, Bradley is president of the Mass. Veterans Association and Massachusetts' representative on the National Executive Committee of the American Legion. He also is a past state commander of the American Legion.

Bradley said he does not know how many veterans may be eligible for recognition. Family members of deceased veterans who did not receive their diploma also may apply, he said.

He said a similar recognition ceremony was held in Woburn, and 19 veterans attended.

Bradley proposes that members of the present senior class be invited to participate so that they can talk with the veterans and hear first-hand about his-story some 50 years ago they had previously only read about.

Greenleaf Building Sold, Woolworth Site Pending

One of Quincy's signature buildings on Hancock Street is under agreement, and another historic building, a onetime hotel, has been sold, according to Sean Kenealy of Key Realty.

Although he declined to identify the buyer of the F.W. Woolworth Building at 1543-1563 Hancock St., he said a purchase-and-sale agreement had been executed about three weeks ago.

The two-story brick and sandstone building was built in 1935 and features a lot of architectural detail. "The building is in fantastic shape for a building of its age," said Kenealy. "It has a newer roof, and it was very well built."

Woolworth's closed a couple of years ago, and it was only six months ago that it had negotiated itself out of its lease with Faxon Trust, he said.

He would not disclose the price of the property which contains 47,405 square feet and includes the former Kennedy Studio. It is assessed at more than $1.1 million.

He said he had received numerous inquiries about the property which he advertised in national journals as well as on his website. It is nestled in the heart of Quincy on one of Quincy's busiest streets, with direct access to the Ross Parking Garage which has parking for more than 1,000 vehicles, he advertised.

A major attraction of the property is that it is one city block within the to-be-constructed Quincy Center Concourse, he said.

Kenealy said Key Realty also handled the recent sale of the historic Greenleaf Building at 1419 Hancock St., at the corner of Granite Street. The three-story brick and sandstone building, accented with pointed arched windows and alternating angled bricks on the wall mass, once served as a hotel. Kenealy said Greenleaf Limited Partnership sold the building to B & E Realty, L.L.P., for $890,000.

He said a sale is also pending on a third building in Downtown Quincy which he identified as the former Social Security office at 152 The Parkingway.

He attributed the interest in this section of the downtown business district to the proposed concourse. "There are a lot of streets in the north and south directions, but not a lot in the east and west direction. The concourse will dramatically affect the traffic flow and the sites deeper down on Hancock Street," toward School Street, he said.

"That accessibility to the highway positively affects the value of these sites," he said.

Board Seeks Update On Restaurant Site

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

The License Board has given Daniel J. Flynn III until June 29 to further update his plans to re-open Walsh's Restaurant, 7-9 Billings Rd. in Wollaston.

Adhering to the new rule adopted last month by the license board, holders must report to the board within 90 days with a progress report, Atty. Steve Coleman, represented Flynn at Tuesday's meeting. Flynn was granted the license in the summer of 1998.

Coleman said that a prior plan was developed by a prospective first tenant who deemed the expense "cost prohibitive" and therefore "backed out."

In a letter written to board Chairman Joseph Shea, Flynn said he was currently working with an architect and builder to resolve the handicap access issues.

Coleman said Flynn intends to continue to renovate the restaurant and is currently in contact with builders to present new plans to the board at the June meeting.

Shea questioned Coleman as to the possibility of Flynn's opening a new restaurant in Marina Bay, and whether he plans to relocate his liquor license.

Coleman said Flynn's plan to open a restaurant Marina Bay has been two years in the planning and that his priority was to renovate Walsh's Restaurant while awaiting word of the Marina Bay project.

Shea said in the event that Flynn re-locates the liquor license, he would have to come back to the board for approval.

Finally at Fire Chief Thomas Gorman request, a motion for Flynn to report back to the board on June 29 was made and voted unanimously by the board.

City Council Seeks $250,000 To Cover Highpoint Legal Fees

The City Council will ask Mayor James Sheets to seek a $250,000 appropriation to cover the cost of legal fees the city expects to incur in the lawsuits filed by Highpoint developer Congress Group Ventures Inc.

City Solicitor Stephen McGrath advised the councilors Monday night that the two outside counsels — former assistant attorney general Thomas Kiley and Boston environmental lawyer Peter Koff — would not be given carte blanche to spend the money but also warned that the legal fees could exceed the amount.

To date, he said Kiley had done minimal work to protect the city's interests.

While Dean Stratouly, president of Congress Group Ventures, has appealed the city council's denial of a special permit to build 1,195 luxury apartments off Quarry Street, the city has filed a lawsuit in Norfolk County Superior Court seeking dismissal of the lawsuit.

Congress Group Ventures also is seeking $6.5 million in damages from the city, claiming the city contributed to the site's contamination while it was used as a landfill between 1930 and 1971.

And, Congress Group Ventures plans to file with the Massachusetts Housing Finance Authority a request for a comprehensive permit to build low- and moderate-income apartments along with market-rate units on the 75-acre site under the state's anti-snob zoning law. This maneuver skirts local jurisdiction.

Congress Group Ventures has hired the Boston law firm of Hill and Barlow, who have made it clear they are going forward on several fronts, McGrath told the councilors. "Consequently, we have to protect Quincy's interests with that same level of commitment."

McGrath said he would gladly meet with the councilors in executive discussion to respond to other concerns, including the merits of the case and the city's legal strategies.

He also declined to reveal the billing rate for the attorneys, although he acknowledged the information was public.

Ward 3 Councilor Patrick McDermott said he wanted to make sure the money is spent diligently. "You shouldn't send off the troops to battle without discussing with them" the direction to move, he said.

"I'm very confident we are standing on good grounds to litigate the suit," McDermott said, who added he had researched on his own other similar lawsuits. "It's important to set the tone. We're up against a big 'challenge and we have to move forward cautiously."

Councillor-at-large Timothy Cahill observed that Congress Group Ventures is trying to recoup their $10 million investment. "We must send a message we are fighting fire with fire and backing up the legal department," said Cahill.

He said committing $250,000 to defend the city is a difficult decision, especially as the city negotiates a teacher contract and an affiliation for Quincy Hospital. "At the same time we must protect ourselves and our neighbors."

The proposed development "affects so many residents. It is the largest undeveloped land parcel in the city and affects three wards," he said.

Councillor-at-large Paul Harold proposed establishing a subcommittee to oversee the expenditure of the money by outside counsel. "This is tax money many say we should be using for other purposes," said Harold.

City Council President Peter Kolson named himself and Cahill, who serves as finance committee chair-

Sheets Suggests Sponsors To Keep First Parish Open For Tourists

Quincy Mayor James Sheets would like to see the Church of the Presidents be open to tourists and has pledged "to do everything we can to help them, if they want us to."

Sheets said he was surprised that the church was unable to meet the related financial costs for the tours of the historic church and the crypts of Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams and their wives, Abigail and Louisa Catherine.

The Adams National Historic Park opens Monday, April 19, for the season and offers tours to the Adams birthplaces and the Adams Mansion and Stone Library from the visitor center. The church is within walking distance.

Sheets said several years ago he personally had helped raise funds to keep the tourist site open but had not been involved in the last three or four years.

Sheets suggested perhaps mounting sponsor boards inside the lobby of the one-time town meeting house to generate financial support from corporate sponsors.

He said he planned to talk with the Rev. Sheldon Bennett, minister of the First Parish Church, Unitarian, to explore the idea.

Stage Set In Ward 6

Looks like there will be at least one preliminary election contest this fall.

A run-off for the Ward 6 city council seat Bruce Ayers, now a state representative, will be leaving at the end of the year, appears assured.

Joseph Newton, who has had some observers wondering if he was going to run, definitely is.

He will make the third candidate and set the stage for a preliminary fight Sept. 14.

Newton will make his official announcement at a reception April 27 at the North Quincy Knights of Columbus Hall, Hancock St. and Hollis Ave.

Already off and running are Brian McNamee and Maryann Mahony.

MCNAMEE

NEWTON

McNamee and Newton figured in a close match-up for the second nomination for the Ward 6 seat two years ago.

McNamee edged Newton by 11 votes for the nomination and then lost to Ayers in the final election. Despite losing by a scant 11 votes, Newton did not ask for a recount.

That was seen by some observers that maybe recounts could become a thing of the past because of the city's now virtual error-proof opt scan voting system. Recounts were fairly frequent back in the days of paper ballots and tabulation by hand.

Perhaps the most famous recount was in the 1973 mayoral election face-off between incumbent Walter Hannon and challenger Joseph LaRaia.

HANNON

Hannon went home the winner election night by 134 votes. But a recount requested by LaRaia showed LaRaia to be the actual winner by 483 votes.

There was another interesting note about that 1997 Ward 6 race. With three candidates, Ayers, McNamee and Newton, there were only nine blanks cast.

SHEA

"Those who turned out to vote knew who they were going to vote for and voted for him," City Clerk Joseph Shea said at the time.

Blanks could be scarce again this year.

'Well Baby' Program At Quincy Hospital

Quincy Hospital will conduct a "Well Baby" (newborn to age 3) presentation Wednesday, April 21 at 7 p.m. in conference room A.

The topic will focus on common concerns and issues parents face during the first three years of a baby's life.

David Irons, M.D., of Quincy Pediatric Associates, and Quincy Hospital in-house physicians Shari Mulvey, M.D. and Donald Reinke, M.D., will discuss eating, sleeping, and behavior management issues.

The program is free and open to the public.

Call 376-4016 for registration and more information.

PAT McDERMOTT wants you to know there's nothing to those rumors he is going to run at-large or not run at all this year.

"They are both wrong," he says. "I absolutely am running for re-election in Ward 3."

In fact, he says, he is already out campaigning and will make an official announcement in May.

"I am flattered that people think I might run at-large," he says. "But right now I am more interested in continuing to serve Ward 3."

McDermott has fully recovered from hip replacement surgery he underwent a year ago.

"I am in good shape," he says. "So I'm out campaigning door-to-door. And, that keeps me in good shape, too."

McDERMOTT

THERE WAS A last minute deletion to the resolution.

Frank McCauley introduced in the City Council last week recognizing James Sheets as Quincy's longest serving mayor under Plan A.

MCCAULEY

SHEETS

McCauley, who served eight years as mayor himself, noted that Sheets had surpassed the late Charles Ross who put in nine years, two months and 20 days. The resolve said in part:

"Whereas Mayor James A. Sheets on March 21, 1999 became the longest serving mayor under the Plan A form of government,

"Be it hereby resolved that the Quincy City Council duly recognize, commend and congratulate Mayor Sheets on this unique achievement."

Dropped from the resolution said McCauley with a mischievous smile was another "whereas" that went something like: "whereas the city council hopes that Mayor Sheets will continue for many years to come."

Deleted, McCauley hinted, out of deference to councillors who would like to be mayor themselves.

Names that usually come up as future mayoral contenders are Tim Cahill, Paul Harold and Dan Raymond.

They have been patiently waiting for the day Sheets decides to step down and go fishing.

McCAULEY still enjoys a reputation as the Jack Benny of Quincy politics when it comes to spending money. Either the city's or his own.

When Ralph (Chick) Papile was honored by the City Council for his 50 years in business as owner of Chick's Barbershop in Quincy Point, McCauley asked him if there was a senior discount.

Papile said "No."

McCauley, who is writing Quincy's political history as part of the city's millennium celebration at Mayor Sheets' request, noted the book "will be priced at a modest $39.00 with a 10 percent discount for city councillors." No freebies.

But, if McCauley sometimes has a little trouble trying to find his wallet, he knows where his heart is.

He is researching and writing the book as a labor of love. No fee.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS AN EARLY 1920's postcard showing the intersection of Hancock Street and Billings Road in Norfolk Downs. In 1892 the name Norfolk Downs was selected in a contest by the land company that was developing the old farms in this area into house lots. The name has no significance. Known locally as the Downs, the area has no defined boundaries. And other than the businesses, there have been no significant landmarks here except for the old railroad station that was named Norfolk Downs.

Hearing Loss 'The Invisible Enemy'

Editor, The Quincy Sun: Did you know that noise induced hearing loss is the fastest growing physical disability in the United States? It is an "invisible enemy" that accumulates slowly and does not hurt when it happens. There are now 28 million Americans with hearing disabilities, and the victims are getting younger and younger.

Contributing to this disturbing trend is the exposure of millions of people to amplified sound in health clubs and aerobics studios. Last year, more than 9 million fitness conscious Americans participated in group aerobics classes to improve their health, totally unaware that the loud music pumping their adrenaline might also be destroying the hair cells in their inner ear.

Survey studies conducted by Dr. Raymond Hull, a Kansas audiologist, and Dr. Kathleen Yaremchuck, a Michigan ear doctor, revealed that many health clubs all across the country use sound levels during aerobics classes that far exceed the noise safety standards set by OSHA. My own past experiences working out in a local gym have confirmed this kind of scenario, which will undoubtedly produce a whole generation of individuals who have improved health but impaired hearing.

To minimize this threat, I urge all residents to support my proposed legislation, Senate Bill 87, which had a hearing before the Joint Committee on Commerce and Labor March 31. Sponsored by Senator Michael Morrissey, this bill would require health clubs to post warning signs about the danger of exposure to amplified sound.

The use of loud music as a motivator in aerobics classes is clearly overshadowed by the possible health risks it creates for consumers. After all, common sense dictates that hearing health is an integral part of total fitness. Therefore, it behooves health clubs to adhere to their fitness mission by helping their customers and employees conserve their hearing, not endanger it.

For more information on Senate Bill 87, please call Senator Morrissey at 722-1494. To voice your support, please call Senate Chairman Stephen Lynch at 722-1150 and House Chairman Peter Larkin at 722-1130. Thank you.

Takes Issue With Clinton And Advisors

Editor, The Quincy Sun: Think tanks on both sides of the Atlantic now admit that their thinking was wrong. They did not anticipate that things would develop in Kosovo as they did. They encouraged KLA, the Kosovo Liberation Army, representing two million people, to use military force against ten million Serbs.

Instead of warning KLA that NATO would not send the ground troops (the blue blood!) to help them, they encouraged them, pretending to be their friends and allies. Sen. John F. Kerry, bereft of reason, advises the President, also bereft of reason, to only arm Moslem Kosovo Albanians.

Slobodan Milosevic offered the Kosovo Albanians exactly the same thing as the U.S. offered them: only autonomy, but not independence. But they told the Albanians that if they would sign "the Pan Peace Agreement," NATO would bomb the Serbs. How to figure out the continuation of fighting in Kosovo and bombing of Serbia, if not by the fact that Clinton did not want peace all along.

The Albanians should have learned a lesson from Bosnia, where the Serbian Moslems were helped only by the Iranians. God bless their soul, but not by any Christians or NATO members. The responsibility for "ethnic cleansing" and for bombing of Iraq and Serbia is President Clinton's and his advisors', who promote war, not peace.

Payroll Stolen From Wollaston Fire Station

By PAUL HAROLD

Thieves stole $1,571 in cash from the Wollaston Fire Station while the engine crew was responding to a false alarm at the corner of Granger and Pine Streets shortly before noon.

The pay envelopes, containing an average of $72, were for the two night-shift workers. They were in Captain Francis Moriarty's desk on the second floor of the station.

Officers of Local 729 took up a collection to help those whose pay was stolen.

CITY ADVISED TO END QUARRY DUMPING

In a letter to Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa, Worthen Taylor, director sanitary engineering for the state Department of Public Health, advised the city to abandon dumping at Hitchcock quarry. He said that a new dumping area should be established until the city constructed its incinerator.

Taylor noted that, "because of the limited area available for sanitary disposal of refuse, Quincy should plan for the construction of an incinerator without delay."

ENC KICKS OFF DEVELOPMENT CAMPAIGN

General Campaign Chairman Wendell Clark kicked off a $200,000 development program at the new Shrader Science Center at Eastern Nazarene College this week. The funds would be raised from the Quincy South Shore area.

Foot Notes

by Dr. Richard A. Hacker
Surgeon-Podiatrist

ORTHOSSES

Orthotic devices are inserts made to fit inside shoes to correct a irregular foot position that causes difficulty walking by changing the angle at which the foot strikes the walking surface. Orthoses may be rigid, soft, or semirigid. A rigid orthosis, made of plastic or other firm material, is custom molded to the foot. It mainly serves to control function in two major joints below the ankle. Rigid orthotics reduce pain in legs and lower back caused by improper foot function. Soft orthoses absorb shock, aid balance and reduce pressure on tender areas of the foot or on deformities. The semirigid orthotic is primarily for dynamic balance during a specific activity. It is frequently made of leather, cork and silicon.

We use today's high-tech diagnostic tools to fit orthotics and to detect foot imbalances, problems and disorders and to help determine the most appropriate treatment with more accuracy than ever possible before. We also use the most up-to-date materials for orthotics and other treatment plans and always include complete instructions for home care. Have you or a family member been bothered by foot pain? We welcome your call at 617-472-3466 for an appointment for compassionate foot care for the family at 110 W. Squantum Street in North Quincy.

P.S.: Children with deformed feet are frequently treated with orthoses as soon as they start to walk in order to stabilize the foot.

Gala To Benefit Easter Seals April 27

The Quincy/South Shore Easter Seal Fundraising Committee will host a special evening Tuesday, April 27 from 6 to 9 p.m. at the New Pasha Bar in Weymouth.

The gala evening, featuring entertainment and refreshments, will benefit the 1999 Easter Seals campaign.

The committee is chaired by John J. O'Connor, III, president of Rockland Savings Bank who is also co-host of the event.

Easter Seals' services are designed to expand independence for all people with disabilities. Services performed include medical rehabilitation, home health care, camping opportunities for the disabled, home equipment loans, stroke support groups and several adaptive swim programs.

One of the newest swim programs was introduced last year at the South Shore YMCA. The fast-growing program features a type of therapy that is unique in that it eliminates gravity and disabled persons can exercise freely without the fear of failing.

Easter Seals is a national association that is not supported by any other charitable organization. Of all the money raised in Massachusetts, 98% of the funds stay in Massachusetts supporting local needs. An impressive 87% of all money donated goes directly to services of people born with disabilities, or disabled as the result of illness, accidents or aging.

Easter Seals has many supporters amongst the local business community because they know the money they donate is spent in services provided to people with disabilities in local communities.

For more information about the event, call (617) 471-3232.

PLANNING EASTER SEALS gala event on April 27 at the new Pasha Bar in Weymouth are, from left, Maralin Manning, executive director of the Quincy Center Business and Professional Association; Kristen Williams, Community Affairs development director, BankBoston; Ayana Dikday, public affairs, Stop & Shop Companies; and John Farmer, senior vice president, Bank of Canton. DOVE To Celebrate 20th Anniversary May 4

DOVE, Inc., the Quincy-based agency for battered women, their children and teen dating violence victims, will celebrate its 20th anniversary Tuesday, May 4 at the Quincy Neighborhood Club.

Guest speaker will be Jim Hardeman, founder of Workplace Violence Interventions and Strategies.

DOVE has been a leader in domestic violence intervention throughout its long history. Incorporated by members of the Mayor's Commission on the Status of Women, DOVE began as a hotline and emergency shelter. Currently, the agency provides services in three primary program areas: shelter, transitional housing and outreach services.

Last year, 153 women and 292 children were sheltered by DOVE. Trained staff and volunteers answered 2,570 calls for help and 455 women were provided outreach services, as well as over 600 Asian families through its Asian Outreach Program.

DOVE's success has depended upon the support and collaboration of Quincy and surrounding communities. Over the past 20 years, working together with members of the community as part of the Quincy Model of Domestic Violence Intervention, DOVE has sheltered over 3,000 women and 8,000 children and answered more than 20,000 hotline calls.

Jed's Gourmet Clam Sauce

Our daughter Nancy sometimes has to work late at her barbershop and that's when her husband Jed whips up a gourmet surprise for her.

When she told me about this one, I wanted to share it with you. It's easy and quick, two things most of us want in our busy lives.

Jed's Gourmet Clam Sauce

- 1 container of fresh minced clams (about 12 ounces)
- 1/4 cup white wine
- 1 small onion (chopped)
- 2 garlic cloves
- 3 tablespoons olive oil
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1/2 cup chopped spinach

fresh parsley smidgen of basil
salt and pepper to taste

In the oil, saute the onion and garlic until garlic is golden brown. Add the clams with the juice, the wine the parsley, basil, salt and pepper. Cook for a couple of minutes until clams are well heated. Then add the spinach and blend.

Pour over linguine (he used a pound) and sprinkle with grated cheese if desired.

(The fresh minced clams have a good amount of juice in them. If you use the canned clams, you might want to add an additional bottle of clam juice with it.)

Committee Seeks Descendants Of Veteran's Buried In Sailors' Home Cemetery

The Sailors Home Cemetery Restoration Committee is seeking descendants of military veterans buried in the Sailors Cemetery off Fenno St., in Wollaston to join in future commemorative services.

Michelle Lydon, chairwoman of the Sailors Cemetery Restoration Committee noted: "Although we believe many of these veteran's had little or no families to speak of, we are hoping to trace any remaining relatives of these brave men to join us in commemorating their service to our country."

"We feel their participation in commemoration services would afford them the opportunity to once again pay tribute to their ancestors in the presence of a community that appreciates their service and wishes to preserve the sanctity of their final resting place. Further, their participation would illustrate the connection these patriots had to our local community.

Earlier this year, the committee launched a year long effort to raise $10,000 necessary to restore and preserve the history of Sailors Home Cemetery near Wollaston Beach in Quincy. The committee will raise funds to repair damaged headstones, purchase a stone memorial describing the cemetery's history and its veterans that lie within as well as interpretative signs which will be visible from Fenno Street. A summer fund raiser is being planned.

The group intends to repaint the flagpole as well as the fence that surrounds the cemetery. In addition, historical information obtained by the committee will be incorporated into a book about the salt water marsh nature trail that is currently being updated by the Beechwood Knoll School.

In conjunction with the committee's work, Quincy resident, Harold S. Crowley Jr. has created a chronology of the National Sailors' Home which provided respite for infirm and aged veterans of Naval service on more than 100 acres in the Beechwood Knoll area of Quincy, Massachusetts from 1865-1931. The chronology is available at the Thomas Crane Public Library and Quincy Historical Society.

Ralph 'Chick' Papile, Family Honored By City Council

Ralph "Chick" Papile and his family embody the spirit of Quincy, Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymond said last week as he presented him with a City Council citation last week in recognition of his 50 years in business as Chick's Barbershop in the Quincy Point community.

"Some measure the quality of a neighborhood by its roads, parks, schools, police and fire departments and the ability of the community to deliver services," said Raymond.

"But it is my feeling that the true measure of a community is formed by its people, the character and integrity of those who live and work there every day," said Raymond.

In recognizing Mr. Papile, Raymond said the citation also recognized his family — his wife, Anna, and their children, Michael, Ralph, Lucia and Laura, and his parents, Leo and Ra-fael, who married in Quincy in 1906.

Mr. Papile's father died in 1962 at the age of 76 and his mother, in 1978 at the age of 90.

Together, Mr. Papile's parents raised 16 children, seven of whom enlisted in World War II, Raymond said. "We can easily find that the Papile family embodies the good qualities of a community who fought through the Depression and responded with patriotism to serve their country," he said.

Raymond said the citation recognizes Mr. Papile's survival as a small businessman at the same spot for more than 50 years, his dedication, loyalty and love for his neighborhood. "You, your family and your parents are a credit to Quincy."

Mr. Papile quipped that the last time he was in the City Council chambers was for a recount. He said his parents so loved Quincy that they named one of their sons, Leo Quincy Papile.

"God has given us a good life, and the city has provided us with a wonderful opportunity," said Mr. Papile.

Councillor-at-large Paul Harold said that Councillor-at-large Frank McCauley is writing a political history of Quincy which will include a chapter on the Papile family. Inevitably, he said, "if you were running for office, you had to stop at Chick's Barbershop, which is a political education in itself of Quincy Point, Quincy and the South Shore."

McCauley added that he first met Mr. Papile 25 years ago and observed that his brother William had served as a city councillor in 1948 and 1949 and that his brother James is an assessor. His sister Mary was an assistant treasurer, and his brother, the late John Papile had a career with the Post Office.

Ronald Zooleck To Receive WORK Inc. Probus Award

Ronald Zooleck, who has headed the South Shore Chamber of Commerce for two decades, is about to receive an award for his contributions to the business opportunities for disabled people.

Zooleck, who lives in Hingham, will receive the Probus Award from WORK Inc., the Quincy-based non-profit organization that provides rehabilitation services, at its April 20 awards ceremony at the John F. Kennedy Library in Boston.

"Ron Zooleck has been a tireless advocate of the notion that a healthy business climate benefits all members of the community," said Hank Cheney, president and CEO of WORK Inc.

"The truth of that contention can be found in WORK Inc.'s relations with the South Shore business community.

RON ZOOLECK

"Twenty years ago, only five WORK Inc. were placed in South Shore businesses. This year we placed more than 100. Ron has fostered a business-friendly environment, and, in turn, his members have become good corporate citizens."

Zooleck said he was "honored to accept this prestigious award on behalf of the South Shore business community,

"We encourage business owners to gain an understanding of the challenges people with disabilities face every day and the obstacles they must overcome.

If they do, they will learn that overcoming challenges builds character and, when given the opportunity, people with disabilities make excellent workers and become outstanding contributors to their companies."

The Probus Award, which is given annually to the organization or individual who demonstrate outstanding leadership on behalf of people with disabilities, is named for the Probus Club, a business organization that gives aid to the disabled.

WHAT'S UP, SPORT?

If you think you are seeing more SUVs on the road, you are right. According to an auto industry research firm, Americans purchased an estimated 7.3 million trucks (including sport utility vehicles, minivans and light trucks) last year, which accounts for an estimated 47 percent of total 1998 vehicle sales. And, according to forecasts, an estimated 49 percent of new-vehicle sales will be composed of light trucks by the year 2001, overtaking car sales by 2002. Leading this trend are sport utility vehicles of which there were 12.6 million on highways in 1997, versus 7.2 million in 1993.

These numbers make it clear that light trucks and SUVs in particular, have captured the buying public's heart.

Using your SUV off-road or in severe driving conditions? Maintaining your SUV and its appearance is important.

Sheets Plans Capital Trip For Squantum Gardens Land Transfer

Mayor James Sheets hopes to travel to Washington, D.C., next week to push the Department of Housing and Urban Development into transferring the 27 acres of former Navy land in Squantum to two non-profit agencies.

Plans call for rehabilitating and converting 24 duplexes into 96 apartments — 70 one-bedroom units, 20 two-bedroom units and six efficiency units — and building a 100-unit assisted living facility and a senior center to serve the elderly throughout the city.

Sheets also wants to urge HUD to finish developing the guidelines for the $30 million Squantum Gardens project, which has been on the drawing board for more than a year, according to assistant city solicitor James Timmins.

He said the conveyance of the property was expected to occur in late 1997 and now hopes it will be completed within the next 45 days. The land is believed to be valued between $3 million and $4 million but will be transferred to the non-profits — Senior Housing Inc., which will oversee the housing at Naval Terrace, and Elder Services Inc., which will manage the senior center and assisted living facility — for $1.

Expected to accompany the mayor is Casimir Kolaski, president of Kolaski Housing Advisors Inc. of Providence, R.I., a former HUD official who now is serving as a consultant to Consultants Inc. of Providence, the designated developer for Squantum Gardens.

Helen Murphy, an assistant to the mayor who has been working on Squantum Garden, also may accompany Sheets. Sheets said no appointments have been scheduled yet with Sens. Edward Kennedy or John Kerry of Rep. William Delahunt or with staff from HUD Secretary Andrew Cuomo's office.

Conway TV Commercial Wins Top Spot In Advertising Competition

MediaOne advertising executives have awarded their "Spot of the Quarter" award to Jack Conway and Company Realtors for a television commercial currently airing in the South Shore area.

The 30-second spot features a young Jack Conway, circa 1935, selling a clubhouse in record time for his friend, "Henry". The "real" Jack Conway winds up the spot in front of a modern home sold by Jack Conway Realtors. The message of the commercial is: "List your house with Conway and consider it sold."

Judged by a 50-member committee, Conway's "Hey, Henry" spot won top honors among a group of entries submitted by MediaOne producers in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and New York. It will now enter a second tier of competition on the national level.

"I'm very hopeful that 'Hey, Henry' will bring home more honors for us here at MediaOne and for Conway Realtors," said Brian Curran, executive producer of the commercial. "I knew it would be a winner even before the suit was finished."

Jack Conway, chairman of the realty firm, said:

"We're very excited about our commercial winning the award," adding that he enjoyed his five seconds of TV fame. "I'm grateful to our ad director, Marie Fricker, who wrote and directed the spot, and I am especially proud of the two young actors, Jack DeSena, 11, of Randolph, and Dan Harold, 12, of Quincy, who played young Jack and his

Check Heating Systems, Chimneys As Fire Precaution

To keep homes safe from fire this winter, the National Fire Protection Association, Quincy Fire Department and Beechwood Community Life Center recommend having all home heating systems and chimneys inspected annually and cleaned, if necessary, before the start of each heating season.

December, January and February are the leading months for home fires and home fire deaths in the U.S. On average, more than one-third of U.S. home fire deaths occur during the winter months.

According to the Quincy-based NFPA, heating equipment fires are the second leading cause of fire deaths in American homes, but during the winter, they are the number-one culprit. Tens of thousands of home heating fires kill hundreds of people on average each year.

Home heating fires are most commonly caused by inadequate chimney cleaning; placing things that can burn too close to space and portable heaters; fueling errors involving liquid- or gas-fueled heaters; and flaws in the design, installation or use of heating equipment.

"The good news is that most of these fires are preventable. It's simply a matter of being aware that these hazards exist, and taking the few steps necessary to avoid them," said Sharon Gamache, NFPA's executive director of High Risk Outreach.

Residents who use space or portable heaters are reminded that anything can burn, including people, pets and furniture, at least three feet away. When leaving the room or going to sleep, make sure to turn the heaters off.

Beechwood's "S.A.F.E. Seniors" program includes a full range of fire prevention programming, information and referral. Fliers, pamphlets and other informational materials are available at the Center, 617-471-5712.

Flynn & Co. Leases Space To Stratis Business Centers

Daniel J. Flynn & Co. recently negotiated a long-term lease for 8,000 square-feet of office space at 99 Derby St. in Hingham.

Flynn & Co. Senior Vice President Jay Nuss brokered the transaction that brings new tenants Stratis Business Centers to the South Shore.

Stratis Business Centers offers small businesses an alternative to conducting business from home offices or committing to leases. Stratis specializes in designing office plans that afford businesses convenient access to professional administrative support, conference rooms, office technology or full-time office space.

Stratis President Shirley

Perdisatt said she's found an ideal location from which to conduct her business.

"We looked at many different locations before we met with Jay about the Derby Street site," Perdisatt said. "Ninety-nine Derby Street offered us great exterior offices with a very appealing Hingham address, seconds off Route 3."

Flynn & Co. President Paul Talkowski is equally enthusiastic about the deal. "Jay's in-depth knowledge of Hingham-area commercial real estate opportunities enabled him to quickly fill the vacancy at 99 Derby Street," Talkowski. "He located an ideal tenant who will benefit greatly from such a highly-accessible location."

Stratis Business Centers is leasing the space from property managers The Bulfinch Companies, Inc.

Daniel & Flynn & Co. is a full service real estate firm specializing in commercial sales and leasing, residential real estate and real estate auctions.

Preventing Food Allergy Tragedies At School

About two percent of school children are subject to life-threatening food allergies. It is likely that every school has at least one child who is at risk for this type of allergic reaction, technically called anaphylaxis. The reaction usually involves hives or swelling, a sudden drop in blood pressure, and difficulty in breathing.

"Telling a child to avoid the foods to which they are allergic is not enough," says allergist Frank Twarog, M.D., president of the New England Chapter of Asthma & Allergy Foundation of America. Sometimes a food appears in unrecognizable form, and sometimes children are placed under pressure to eat a birthday party treat or participate in a classroom project involving a food they must not taste.

Peanuts are one of the most common causes of life-threatening food allergies, and they are widely found in schools, not only as peanut butter, but as hidden ingredients such as peanut flour or oil.

How can a child with potentially fatal food allergies be protected at school? The Asthma & Allergy Foundation of America/New England Chapter believes that a reasonable plan should be put in place and the school nurse should coordinate it with parents and all relevant school staff (including bus drivers and trip leaders).

The Foundation has just developed and mailed to schools throughout New England a free resource packed for school nurses and administrators entitled, "Preventing Life Threatening Food Allergy Emergencies in Schools." The kit includes a description of food allergies/anaphylaxis, practical guidelines for making both emergency and daily management, and a position statement on medical treatment from the American Academy of Asthma, Allergy and Immunology (a professional medical society).

The packet does not suggest eliminating foods from schools, but instead suggests that all the child's teachers, coaches, school bus drivers and classmates be educated about the potentially fatal nature of even one taste of food to which a child is severely allergic. It suggests that such foods not be used in classroom projects, parties, arts and crafts, science experiments or cooking. It also suggests training food service workers to avoid cooking or serving different foods with the same utensils, and discouraging children from sharing foods.

Nurses are urged to speak to their school physicians about being prepared to administer effective emergency treatment, and schools are also urged to call 911. The Foundation states that "Every school with a child at risk for anaphylaxis needs a full-time school nurse." At the very least, the nurse should carefully train and delegate responsibility to appropriate staff.

Any school nurse who did not receive the kit should call the Foundation at 617-965-7771 (or toll free 1-877-2-ASTHMA.) This number may also be called for information about the foundation's other educational programs and materials, says Patricia Goldman, executive director.

The Low Down On Back Pain

(NAPS)—Acute low back problems are experienced by almost everyone at some point in their lives. They are the most frequent cause of disability for people under age 45. However, there is some encouraging news for those who suffer back pain and ways you can help prevent back problems from becoming an emergency.

You may want to consider these tips from the American College of Emergency Physicians (ACEP):

- Prevention of low back problems. The best way to prevent low back problems is to stay fit and do regular appropriate exercise. If you must lift something, be sure to keep all lifted objects close to your body and avoid lifting while twisting, bending forward or reaching.

Don't get caught in the lurch with back pain.

• When low back symptoms return. "More than half of the people who recover from a first episode of acute low back symptoms will have another episode within a few years," said Dr. Richard MacKenzie of ACEP.

"While waiting for your back to improve, you may be able to make yourself more comfortable if you wear comfortable shoes, use a chair with support and rest your feet on the floor or on a low stool if you must sit for long periods of time."

"Listen to your body. If it hurts, don't do it. In time you will be able to do most everything, as long as you allow your body to heal," added Dr. MacKenzie.

Most low back problems get better quickly—usually within four weeks. If your symptoms are not getting better within this time period, you should contact your health care provider.

The Agency for Health Care Policy Research has developed a clinical practice guideline on acute low back pain stating that some common treatments, such as extended bed rest (for more than 4 days), may prolong symptoms or further debilitate patients and therefore is not an appropriate treatment.

• Get medical attention right away. "If your back pain is accompanied by numbness in the groin or rectal area, extreme leg weakness, bowel or bladder control problems, it may mean a more serious condition," said Dr. MacKenzie.

FREIBERG'S INFRACTION

The term "Freiberg's Infraction" certainly sounds exotic. It sounds like one of those fascinating diseases we hear about in T.V. programs like 20/20. However, although very interesting to people in Podiatry and Orthopedics, it is not a disease caused by a strange virus (as far as we know) or as a result of a journey to a far off land. Simply stated it is the destruction of a metatarsal head resulting from compromised circulation to that part of the bone. The circulation can be compromised by several factors, most likely, a past injury. The end result is very dramatic since the affected bone is virtually destroyed and rendered useless. The patient sometimes experiences severe pain similar to that seen with advanced arthritic changes of a joint. Since it involves an area of the foot that bears a significant amount of weight, walking becomes quite difficult. This condition can affect people ranging from teenagers to seniors.

Patients seem to seek help from the combination of the pain and "bony lumps" that they can feel around the joint. The lumps become quite noticeable in Freiberg's Infraction, reaching the size of small marbles that can be felt under the skin. This condition can be diagnosed with the combination of a physical exam and X-rays. Treatment can be non-surgical but, sometimes surgery is necessary.

If you are suffering from these or any other foot related complaints, call us at 773-4300. We are located at 1261 Furnace Brook Parkway, Suite #18, Quincy, and are affiliated with Carney, Quincy and South Shore Hospitals.

SPRING CAR CARE

Braking Systems Most Important For Safety

(NAPS)—We have become a nation of motorists who are commuting further, speeding faster, and idling longer in stop-and-go traffic on our congested highways.

"With this new driving reality, what becomes critically important is our ability to stop shorter and this requires high quality brakes," according to Marshall Doney, vice president of Automotive Services for AAA. "The braking system is the most important system for the safety of the driver and passengers."

Fortunately, there's good news for consumers because now they can purchase replacement brake pads that have undergone rigorous and objective testing known as "D'Ea" (Dual Dynamometer Differential Effectiveness Analysis). Up until now, automotive technicians had no way of knowing whether a replacement brake pad was consistent with performance standards established for a specific vehicle. And, because no federal safety standards exist for replacement brake parts, most vehicles today with replacement brake parts are not performing at the level to which they were designed.

That's why D'Ea technology represents a major breakthrough in laboratory evaluation of brake friction materials.

D'Ea certifies consistency with Original Equipment Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standards for new vehicle brake systems. Brake pads that have been D'Ea certified can stop a car at least 20 feet shorter than non-certified brands from a speed of 45 miles per hour.

According to Steve Handschuh, president of NAPA (National Automotive Parts Association), "D'Ea" is the answer for setting a high industry standard and it is the only test that determines if a brake pad will effectively stop a vehicle in the way it was designed to stop. D'Ea certified products provide the long overdue 'seal of approval' that consumers can rely upon as an objective measurement of quality, safety and performance for brake pads."

This advanced technology and machinery was developed by Detroit-based Greening Testing Laboratories, Inc., an independent party not affiliated with a friction product manufacturer. The D'Ea certified program is a voluntary process and only a select few companies like NAPA offer a premium brake line—NAPA United Application-Engineered—that is D'Ea certified.

What most consumers don't know is that when they brake, it requires a force ten times as powerful as the force that moves the car to stop it. So if you hear your car squeaking or grinding when you depress the brake, your braking system needs attention. Or, if the pedal "fades," feels spongy or falls under steady foot pressure, it's time to take your vehicle in for service.

Drive Around In A Clean Car

(NAPS)—Each year, Americans spend millions of dollars on a variety of products to keep their cars clean. What many people don't realize, however, is that they may already have a common household product that can do the job better, and for less money.

WD-40, often thought of as only a lubricant, is actually a multi-purpose cleaner, penetrant, moisture displacer and rust preventative, as well as a lubricant. It has been reported by many consumers to be a great product to keep a car clean, inside and out. It is effective in removing tar, mud and other deposits from chrome as well as painted surfaces without harming the finish.

The product works well on a car's grille to remove or prevent build-up of splattered bugs and grime. It can even remove old bumper stickers with ease. A spray on the hood or roof and a rinse with soapy water can also remove tree sap or bird droppings.

WD-40 also works beautifully on the car's interior. If the upholstery or carpet has been soiled with crayon or greasy fingerprints, a spray on the affected area and gentle rubbing with a cloth can remove the stain. It is also used to remove gum stuck in carpeting or between seats. It is suggested to wash with soap and water after removal.

With this one versatile product, you can skip the expensive car care products and take care of many of your car cleaning needs. You may already have some around the house.

And while cleaning the car, other needs, such as lubri-

Quincy Rotary To Host April 22 Charity Auction

The Quincy Rotary will host its annual Kids Classic Charity Auction Thursday, April 22 at The Neighborhood Club.

Proceeds will benefit Quincy Police Department's D.A.R.E. program and support scholarships for graduating seniors of Quincy and North Quincy High School. Among the long list of unique items to be auctioned are a helicopter ride, an adult membership to the YMCA, a midnight charter fishing trip, a week at an Irish cottage and other vacation trips, and a variety of sports memorabilia and fine dinners.

The event will begin at 6 p.m. with a silent auction and cocktails, followed by dinner at 7 p.m. and the live auction at 8 p.m. Rotary President-Elect Daniel J. Flynn III will serve as Master Auctioneer. Honorary guest auctioneers will be Mayor James A. Sheets, South Shore Chamber of Commerce President Ronald Zooleck, Quincy Kiwanis President Robert Bosworth and Quincy Lions President Steven Mansfield.

"We are very excited to be sponsoring the Kids Classic auction again this year," Flynn said. "We have amassed an outstanding list of items this year. This event is a great chance for an enjoyable night out for a very meaningful cause."

Tickets are available for $35 by calling the Auction Hotlines, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at any of these numbers: 617-479-9000, 617-786-0059 or 617-471-0750.

Y2K Public Forum At ENC April 21

Eastern Nazarene College (ENC) and Boston University's "Center for Millennial Studies" (CMS) will host the public forum on the "Y2K computer problem" and its effect on public utilities.

The event, featuring experts from both sides of the utilities debate, will be held Wednesday, April 21 from 7 to 9 p.m. at Eastern Nazarene College's Cove Auditorium, Wendell Ave., Wollaston.

The forum will feature industry Y2K experts and independent Y2K analysts who will discuss and answer questions on the readiness of New England and of the U.S. for Y2K. Panelists will include: Phil Prugnara, Y2K Remediation Coordinator from Seabrook Nuclear Station, Jim Sinclair, from ISO New England, the Independent System Operator which manages and controls the power "grid" for the New England region; Rick Cowles, national Y2K utilities expert, author and "critic" of the power industry's Y2K readiness; Lou Marcoccio, lead author and most quoted Y2K analyst for the Gartner Group; and Steve Bray, CEO of Power Plus in Los Angeles, a national expert on the use of temporary and back up power, who will address inventory and safety concerns for those using back-up power supplies. Representatives from the Nuclear Energy Institute (NEI) and the North American Electrical Reliability Council (NERC) have also been invited.

The event will be moderated by ENC Professor Ned Vankevich, forum coordinator and author of Y2K Made Simple. Vankevich notes, "The electric utility question lies at the foundation of our entire modern infrastructure. This is a rare opportunity to cut through the 'smoke' and 'spin' and hear front line power industry specialists and their critics address the true state of readiness for what Y2K might bring. We also hope to disclose some of the key concerns that could affect us all in the days ahead."

The forum is free and open to the public and is wheelchair accessible.

Panelists will be available for individual or group interviews immediately following the event, in the Cove Auditorium Media Room.

For more information or directions, call Eastern Nazarene College at (617) 745-3715.

Keating Plans To Drain 60 Million More Gallons From Granite Rail Quarry

By MARILYN JACKSON

Norfolk County District Attorney William Keating says the next step in the homicide investigation focusing on the Granite Rail Quarry is to drain some 60 million gallons of water from the site.

Last fall, the level of water in the quarry was lowered by about 115 feet, pumping more than 71 million gallons into a catch basin on Ricciuti Drive before spilling underneath the Southeast Expressway to Furnace Brook.

On Sunday, American Underwater Recovery, a Cape Cod firm that specializes in salvage efforts, completed the mapping of the quarry floor and its underwater filming in an effort to locate a body first sighted by divers in late 1997. The company used an underwater camera outfitted with 1000-watt lights as well as a sonic mapping device to create a video and topographical map of the entire quarry floor with its varying depths.

State Police divers stood on standby to recover a body, but nothing was detected either by camera or sonic sensors.

"We [searched] every area, except for the area that juts out the quarry wall," said Keating. That is the area where State Police divers first saw a body during their recovery efforts during which they found the body of Patrick "P.J." McDonagh.

"It will be weeks before draining the quarry of the remaining water will begin," Keating said Tuesday. "We're being careful. We're moving slowly, methodically. There's no need to unnecessarily rush. We want to ensure the safety of all."

Before the draining can resume, a staging area must be relocated over deeper water, stays and electricity must be disconnected, and a larger size pump brought in. He said the MDC, which to date has spent about $1 million to shore up the quarry walls and drain the 71 million gallons of water, has contracted with the J.F. White Company to bring other equipment to the site.

Keating added the Gov. Paul Cellucci's office has assured him that funding would not be delayed to resume the draining. Keating said he had budgeted between $30,000 and $50,000 to bring American Underwater Recovery to Quincy.

"They were able to get a very clear view of the one portion of the quarry where we wanted to investigate, except where the granite protrudes into the quarry," he said.

With the stationary cameras, the floor was clear. "There was a tape measure, and you could read the numbers. Most of what is on the quarry floor are logs, branches and pieces of wood all covered with silt."

Once the area is drained, state and city officials will decide what to do with that area. "I'm hopeful, as many people are, that this area can be eliminated as an attractive nuisance," said Keating.

Keating would not comment as to who he thinks the body may be, although the Charles Hammond, the father of a missing woman, believes it may be that of his daughter, Karen, who disappeared more than four years ago. Keating said both he and his detectives had talked with Mr. Hammond on numerous occasions.

"But no one knows for sure" who it is, said Keating. "That's the honest answer. And we're going to contact family members before we do anything else."

Dance Studio License Granted

The License Board voted Tuesday to grant a dance studio license to Robert Lawton, from the TC Dance Club at 19 Temple St., Quincy Center.

The site was a former computer company. Lawton told the board he and his staff will teach ballroom dancing with groups travelling to various dancing establishments.

Lawton owned a studio in the Newton area for four years and plans to operate the new studio in Quincy starting this week.

He told the board that he has about ten students coming to the Quincy studio from Newton.

A 25-Year Tradition, An Impressive Alumni Quincy Track Club: Every Kid Gets A Chance And A Trophy

By TOM HENSHAW

The late Frank Kelly had a daughter who loved track. She was good at it. But, when the schools shut down for the summer, there was no place in Quincy to run and jump. There was always the Striders but they were a half hours drive to Brockton.

So Kelly started the Quincy Track Club, which is observing its 25th anniversary this year with some 600 boys and girls poised to register for the club season that starts the first Monday in May and extends through the first Saturday in August.

Registration starts on Friday, April 16, and continues on three consecutive Fridays.

"We start them at five," said Jeff Hennessy, coach of cross country and girls track teams at North Quincy High School. "Most of our kids are five to 14. We have had high school kids compete in the summer time when it doesn't conflict with the schools."

Since its founding in 1974, the Quincy Track Club has seen about 10,000 kids go through the program. The club boasts an impressive alumni list, some of whom have not necessarily earned their renown in track and field.

There's Karen Cashman,

FRANK KELLY
Founder

who won a bronze medal in speed skating at the 1994 Winter Olympics. She started with the track club at the age of 7.

Michelle Milanne, who won a full track scholarship to Northeastern. Mike Yee, a staff member for three years, is now the coach at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham.

Linda Morach, who graduated from North Quincy High in 1981 and is now the track coach at the prestigious girls' school, Brearley, in New York.

And Joe Dudek, the All American football player at Plymouth State in New Hampshire, who played a few pro games for the Denver Broncos in the NFL.

If you get the idea that the Quincy Track Club is not limited just to future trackmen and women, you're right.

"Kids who prefer other sports can take advantage of our training," said Hennessy, who was fresh out of North Quincy High when he joined the staff of the club. He is the only member of the staff who has survived the first 25 years.

"Of the 42 girls on the North Quincy track team, only two or three were not in our club. But members of the volleyball team were almost all in the club, too. You can always tell the track club members on the soccer team. They can run all day.

"Track club kids tend to dominate their sports."

The Quincy Track Club competes in meets against other club track teams. Their oldest rival is the Needham Track Club. Quincy is annually invited to take part in Needham's big meet with eight other clubs. Needham visits Quincy for a dual meet at Veterans Stadium.

The big event is the Frank Kelly Memorial Meet, which will be held this year on Saturday, July 24. Founder Kelly, a photographer for the old Boston Traveler, died in 1976.

Club membership is not just limited to Quincy kids. There are tracksters in training from such places as Dorchester, Braintree, Canton, Avon and other towns that do not have track clubs on their own.

All that is required is a $50 registration fee ($40 for pre-registrants) and a desire to run, jump or throw and learn how.

"We raise some funds at the Rotary Club's Jogathon and the 3 1/2-mile Corporate Challenge road race, where we man the water stops," said Hennessy. "We've been doing it since it started."

Unlike Little Leagues baseball, where parents who have little knowledge of baseball are often named coaches, the track club coaches have some experience at the event they teach.

"They teach the events that they did themselves in high school or college," said Hennessy. "This removes the so-called 'Little League parents syndrome' with the parent coaching his own kid."

Membership in the Quincy Track Club reads like a United Nations meeting.

"We have Irish kids who still have a brogue, Jamaicans and Asians. We have tons of Asians," said Hennessy. "We have flyers printed in Chinese. We have interpreters and a special phone number for Asians to call."

The highlight of the club season is the annual banquet at the end of September at Lombardo's in Randolph. Last year's banquet attracted 700 people.

And, true to its creed that everyone takes part, every kid who enrolled for the season gets a trophy and a sweatshirt.

The Year Quincy's 'Flying Finns' Won The Marathon

By ED SPARGO

The approach of another Patriots' Day conjures up for me, and a precious few remaining old-time residents of our historic city, warm memories of April 19, 1919 when Quincy's "Flying Finns" made history by dominating the B.A.A. Marathon.

For the surprise winner and runner-up in the prestigious Boston race 80 years ago were two veteran runners from the Hurja A.C. Club of West Quincy, Carl W. Linder and Willie Wick, longtime friends and distance racing buddies.

Linder, 29, and a Fore River shipyard pattern maker, completed the long grind from Hopkinton in 2 hours, 29 minutes and 13 seconds and Wick crossed the line a minute later. Willie, age 31, worked in a Finnish bakery in Brewer's corner.

As youngsters we South Quincyites were thrilled by the one-two finish of the men we rooted for and admired. For, while playing ball at old Smith's Field, now Kincaide Park, we saw their grit and determination as they trained by jogging along Winter Street almost daily, dodging clanging trolley cars and the new-fangled automobile.

Both Linder and Wick were born in Finland and you may say they could attribute that smashing triumph in 1919 to "remote control." For they trained by proxy, under the tutelage of professional Finnish runner, Willie Kolehmainen, who mailed them daily instructions from "the old country."

Two other Quincyites did themselves proud in the

CARL LINDER

Winner - 1919

and fellow Finns who jammed Finnish Temperance Hall to hail the conquering heroes.

The marathon course is the same but running it back then was far different than today.

There was, of course, no television coverage. And hardly the fame enjoyed by winners now.

Linder, for example, reportedly finished the marathon, walked to a B.A.A. bathhouse where he took a shower and changed into street clothes. He then tucked his trophy under his arm, according to the report, walked to South Station, and got on a train for Quincy. When he arrived home, he showed simply the trophy to his wife and family.

And, that was it. No big hoopla.

Lamentably, today there are few vestiges of the proud Finnish heritage created by the thousands who came here from "The Old Country" in the 1880s to work the quarries and in the stone sheds and at Fore River shipyard. In quest of a better life and education for their children.

But, thanks to the dedicated efforts of Walter Nisula, a noted historian and his wife, Esther, that heritage will be preserved for posterity. Because this enterprising duo salvaged partially burned records after Temperance Hall was destroyed by a fire in 1973. Thus documenting for Quincy Historical Society the important role the hard-working Finnish populace played in the growth of our "City of Presidents!"

May it never be forgotten.

endurance contest that started at high noon in Hopkinton that holiday, for Henry Kanto came home in 10th place and Otto Alenius finished 23rd.

The exciting one-two triumph of Linder and Wick triggered a week-long celebration, headed by Mayor "Joe" Whiton and a proud contingent of city officials

Sixth Grade Presidents Clinch Basketball Title

Quincy Presidents sixth grade travel basketball team put the finishing touches on an undefeated season (23-0) by capturing the South Shore Youth Basketball League (SSYBL) championship crown with a stirring 64-51 victory over a talented Easton team.

Due to scheduling conflicts the game was played on Easton's home court and Easton jumped out to a 9-2 lead. Quincy quickly called time-out and changed its defensive scheme from a halfcourt zone to a fullcourt press to combat the Easton sharpshooters.

The Presidents immediately scored and created a number of steals off its trademark defensive pressure applied with great success by Dave Jaehnig, Alex and Parker Scott, Chris Marinelli and Tony Pepdjonovic. While Easton applied its own fullcourt pressure, Jaehnig was instrumental in breaking the press and distributing the ball, particularly to Pepdjonovic who led all scorers with 17 first-half points.

Quincy continued to drive to the basket and take short 10-12 foot jump shots which accounted for the majority of its scoring. After Quincy extended its 10-point lead Easton called time-out and hit a couple of three pointers to cut into the lead. However, defensive pressure by Steve Priscella and Zac Eaton, along with key baskets by Parker Scott, Jaehnig and Sandonato gave Quincy an 11-point half-time lead (37-26).

Easton came out in the second half by double-teaming Jaehnig and Pepdjonovic in an effort to slow down the Presidents' high-powered offense. However, key contributions by Sandonato (who was battling the flu), and Marinelli and Eaton who controlled the boards extended Quincy's lead to 16 points.

Quincy continued to successfully apply its defensive pressure by getting key contributions from Shane Holt, fifth grader Jesse Buckley and fourth-grader Wendell Cosgrove. Late in the second half Easton, whose only two losses during the regular season were to Quincy, hit three 3-pointers to close the lead to six points. After yet another steal by Parker Scott and several Quincy rebounds, Jaehnig, Marinelli and Alex Scott hit key free throws while Pepdjonovic continued to find the range with 10 second-half points (game high 27). Jaehnig finished with 13, Marinelli 7, Parker Scott had 6, Alex Scott 5, with two each by Eaton, Priscella and Sandonato.

While Quincy has had league champs in the past, this is the first time any Presidents' team has gone undefeated in the regular season and play-offs. The team was coached by Bob "Moose" Cochrane and Wendell Cosgrove, both of whom would like to thank and congratulate the entire team for all of its hard work this season, which began in late November and concluded with its championship victory March 29. The coaches also extend thanks to all those who helped make this such an enjoyable and successful season.

Quincy's seventh and eighth grade teams were also successful this year. The eighth grade defeated Braintree in the first round of playoffs before bowing to Scituate. The seventh grade captured hard-fought playoff victories over top teams from Easton and Milton (in overtime) before falling to Hingham in the SSYBL semi-finals.

Impressive Performances But North Bows To OCL Powers

North Quincy High School girls' spring track team dropped two meets to the powers of the Old Colony League but turned in many impressive performances.

In a 76-60 loss to Falmouth, Kellie Johnston was a triple winner taking the 100 meters in a school record tying 12.8, then captured the 200 and longjump. Lynda Wilson took the mile and two mile. Other winners were Ellen Tang (discuss), and the 4x400 team of Kellee Conley, Ali Lacy, Laura Wells and Kellyrose O'Brien.

Taking seconds were Lacy (400), Natalie Caron (800), Colleen Lahar (300 hurdles and triple jump), Lena Yuen (shot), and Katie Markhard (high jump). Thirds were taken by O'Brien (200), Conley (400), Genevieve O'Brien (800), Sarah Houghton (two mile), Lauren Sleeth (javelin) and Tang (shotput).

North held a one point

lead until the 100 meter hurdles when the powerful Clippers swept. A win by Falmouth in the 4x100 increased their lead. North got within three after Johnston's win in the longjump, but a 1-2 finish in the javelin (North was without Class A runner-up Mo Holleran), by Falmouth clinched it.

Still, Coach Geoff Hennessy was excited about his young team's performance. "Usually Falmouth scores around 100 points. This was way different. Our freshmen and rookies were super, and the team scored 26 personal bests in the meet -- and it's April 1st!"

Against huge (70 girls) and talented (Class A runner-up team last spring) Silver Lake North dropped a 89-42 decision. Johnston again provided fireworks taking the 100 in 12.9, as well as a second in 200 and third in longjump. Other winners were Ali Lacy (800), Lynda Wilson (mile), Sarah Houghton (2-mile), and Ellen Tang (discuss). Seconds were taken by Kellyrose O'Brien (400), Natalie Caron (2-mile), and Colleen Lahar (300 hurdles). Thirds were scored by Linda Nguyen (mile), Lahar (triplejump), Gen O'Brien (800), and Kellee Conley (400).

The Lakers superior depth resulted in four sweeps (100m hurdles, shotput, javelin and highjump).

"Our young kids still did well against a senior dominated team," Hennessy said. "We have one major scoring senior on our team (Johnston). By the league meet we'll close the gap considerably -- we always do."

North traveled to Taunton Tuesday.

Steven Crosby On Dean's List

Steven J. Crosby of Quincy has been named to the Dean's List at Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences for the fall semester.

Crosby, the son of Dorothy and Frederick Crosby, is a candidate for a bachelor of pharmacy degree.

North Quincy Wins Opener

BASEBALL

With a large part of the team that went to the Division 1 Eastern Massachusetts finals last year, North Quincy recently opened its season with an 11-8 win over Canton in a non-league contest.

Junior right hander Matt McCann was the starter and pitched 5 innings, giving up only 2 earned runs while striking out 4. Outfielder Kevin Walsh went 2-2 with a pair of triples and a sacrifice fly that accounted for five Red Raider runs.

Junior first baseman Rob Celata was 3-4 with a run batted in and 3 runs scored. John Gavin was 1 for 2 and executed a perfect squeeze that scored a North run.

Adam Goodrich was 2 for 4 and Chris Walsh was 1 for 3. Brian Deputula pitched a perfect 6th inning and Rob Celata struck out two in the 7th inning to get the save.

First-year Head Coach Larry Taglieri said he was very familiar with the athletes who came out for the team.

"This team has very high expectations for this year and they're working hard," Taglieri said.

North will have good pitching in Rob Celata, Matt McCann, sophomore lefty Keith Doherty and right-hander Kevin Walsh, Brian Deputula and Joe Flynn.

In the outfield will be Keith Doherty, Chris Walsh, Flynn, Mike Keddy, freshman Pat Bregoli and Brian Walsh.

In the infield, Coach Taglieri will have John Gavin and T.J. Bell at third, senior Chris Bregoli at short, senior Adam Goodrich at second and Deputula and James Mateju at first. Bill O'Toole and Deputula will share the catching duties.

After getting his first win under his belt, Coach Taglieri said. "It's great to get it out of the way, but we have a lot of work to do this season."

A Thought For The Week

A wise saying by Confucius states: "Without knowing the force of words, it is impossible to know men."

Today it seems that we are being constantly inundated with words... Some very meaningful; some pure "bureaucratic"; some misleading; some truthful, some false.

We all know that many famous politicians, many famous leaders have a certain knack with words. They know how to use the right word at the right time - in the right place - to say what they mean and mean what they say!

Lincoln is quoted as saying after he lost the electoral election to Douglas: "It is a slip and not a fall." His words proved true. Instead of saying: "We owe a lot to the R.A.F.," Churchill said: "Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few."

We all have heard the expression: "Don't count your chickens until they're hatched." But would you know what was meant if you heard: "Do not count your poultry prior to successful termination of the process of incubation?"

Yes, in our tumultuous world today, we have to use our ears very wisely when we hear words that can or cannot help solve our present day problems.

Rabies Clinic April 24 At Animal Shelter

The Quincy Health Department will hold a Rabies Immunization Clinic Saturday, April 24 from noon to 3 p.m. at the Quincy Animal Shelter, 56 Broad St. (behind George F. Bryan Post and Fr. Bill's Place), rain or shine.

Cost is $8 for each dog and cat. The department strongly encourages pet owners to have their cats and dogs immunized against this serious disease.

Rabies is a viral disease transmitted mainly to dogs and cats through bite wounds from wildlife such as raccoons, bats, skunks, foxes and stray cats. The fatal disease is extremely rare in humans and has been fairly uncommon among animals in this part of the country.

However, an outbreak of rabies continues to occur in this state. A total of 2,687 animals have tested positive for rabies in Massachusetts since September of 1992: 1825 raccoons, 79 cats, 672 skunks, 55 woodchucks, 39 foxes, 2 dogs and 21 other species.

In Quincy, 18 raccoons, 7 skunks, 2 bats, one stray cat and three dogs have tested positive for rabies. A raccoon testing positive for rabies last year bit a young boy, who was successfully treated with a series of anti-rabies vaccine.

It is very important to vaccinate all pets to avoid contact with wild animals. Dogs and cats must be vaccinated once over three months of age and re-vaccinated within 9 to 12 months after the first vaccination. Thereafter, the dog or cat must be vaccinated once every three years as long as the two vaccines at 9 to 12 intervals have been administered.

For those whose pets received the yearly vaccine at the April 25, 1998 clinic, the second yearly vaccine must be received at the April 24, 1999 clinic. For those whose dogs or cat received two vaccines less than one year apart and who show proof (receipt you received from health department or veterinarian) of these vaccinations, a three-year vaccine will be administered at the appropriate clinics.

To reduce exposure to rabies take the following precautions:

- Vaccinate all pet cats and dogs against rabies.
- Do not touch, pick up, or feed wild or stray animals of any kind.
- Teach children to avoid wildlife and strays.
- Avoid sick or strangely acting animals.
- Fasten trash cans tightly. Garbage attracts raccoons and skunks.
- Cap chimneys and seal openings into houses, etc. to prevent raccoons from entering or building dens.

• If you are bitten or scratched by any animal, you should promptly wash the wound(s) with soapy water and contact a doctor immediately.

• If your pet has been bitten or scratched by any animal, wear gloves, wash the wound with warm soapy water for at least 10 minutes, and contact your veterinarian immediately.

Board Cancels Restaurant License

The License Board Tuesday cancelled a common victualer license issued to Quincy Jade, 1563 Hancock St. who had planned to move across the street to the former Kennedy Studio, 1486 Hancock St.

Complying with the new rule adopted by the license board last month in which all license holders must report to the board within 90 days with a progress report, Atty. Dennis Harrington sent a letter to the board regarding Quincy Jade.

Quincy Jade was issued the common victualer license on Feb. 10, 1998, and had planned to purchase and renovate the studio, but as a result of problems relating to the building, they were prevented from completing the purchase, and subsequently could not activate or the common victualer license as granted.

They will continue to operate their restaurant at 1496 Hancock St. and will be renewing their common victualer license at the end of the year.

License Board Chairman Joseph Shea noted that Tuesday's cancellation marked the "first time a license was cancelled under the new policy."

CRITIC'S CORNER

RAVENOUS: Isolated with eight other people in a snowbound fort in the Sierra Nevada, circa 1847, an Army captain (Guy Pearce) must fight the ravenous cannibalistic hunger raging within, as well as the enemy without - a powerful cannibal killer (Robert Carlyle). This flick teeters on the brink. It's not exactly a slasher movie, but it's not a real thriller either. If you're not into guts and gore, stay away from it!

PUSHING TINI: Set in the pressure-cooker environment of air-traffic control, the story revolves around two controllers whose intense rivalry and penchant for one-upmanship threatens to unravel their careers, marriages - and the planes in their airspace. John Cusack, Billy Bob Thornton, Kate Blanchett and Angelina Jolie star. With this cast and the fine plot, you can't miss. It's an edge-of-your-seat stunner.

NEVER KISSER: Josie (Drew Barrymore) is a talented copy editor at the Chicago Sun-Times who yearns to become a reporter. But when she finally gets her wish, it turns out to be the assignment from hell: Josie, a self-described "geek to the core," must go undercover at a local high school to report on today's teenagers. Now, at age 25, Josie must figure out her story - and a potential new love - while reliving her nightmare adolescence. Molly Shannon, David Arquette, Michael Vartan, John C. Reilly, Leanne Soshinski and Garry Marshall round out the cast. As always, Drew is a delight to watch. The younger set will love this one.

John Quincy Adams In C-SPAN Spotlight

By MARILYN JACKSON

John Quincy Adams, the sixth President of the United States, will be the week-long focus of C-SPAN's series of Presidential portraits.

A live cablecast will be aired at 9 a.m. Sunday, April 18, at the Massachusetts Historical Society at 1154 Boylston St., Boston, and rebroadcast at 8 p.m. Friday, April 23.

In 1956 the Adams family gave the Adams Papers Collection to the society, which includes more than a quarter million manuscript pages of the letters and diaries of generations of Adamses — Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams, their wives, Abigail Smith Adams and Louisa Catherine Adams, Charles Francis Adams and Abigail Brooks Adams.

The historical society has microfilmed the entire collection which is now available at more than 90 libraries here and abroad. Importantly, the society also is sponsoring the Adams Papers editorial project, which to date total 36 volumes published by Harvard University Press.

The format for the program has not yet been finalized, according to John Maynard of the C-SPAN staff, but some of the individuals who will talk about John Quincy Adams include Bill Fowler, president of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and Celeste Walker, an associate editor of the Adams Papers.

Fowler said he expects the program to focus in part on several documents, such as an original copy of the Declaration of Independence and correspondence between John Adams and Thomas Jefferson as well as other correspondence by John Quincy Adams, which are kept behind lock and key.

Last month, C-SPAN focused on John Adams and filmed an interview between C-SPAN President Brian Lamb and Pulitzer Prize-winning author and historian David McCullough, who is now working on a book about the second President.

C-SPAN's Maynard said vignettes of John Quincy Adams and the historic sites of Quincy — the Adams birthplaces, the Old House, the Stone Library as well as the Stone Temple, which contain the crypts of John Adams and John Quincy Adams and their wives, Abigail and Louisa Catherine — will be interspersed among the live telecasting of Congressional hearings.

Walker, who among others believes John Quincy Adams was "intellectually the strongest President we have ever had," said she hopes to display the first volume of his diaries when C-SPAN visits the historical society. John Quincy Adams began his journal entries when he was 11, she said, when, at the request of his father, he traveled with Francis Dana as a translator. Dana was sent to Europe to establish diplomatic relations with the American colonies but was not very fluent in French, the diplomatic language of the time, she explained.

Along with the entries are his drawings of ships, she added.

"The whole week is devoted to John Quincy Adams, not just Sunday," Maynard continued. Sometime during the week, author Paul C. Nagel will be featured, he said.

Nagel is the author of "John Quincy Adams, A Public Life, A Private Life" which was published by Random House in 1997. Harvard University Press published a British edition this year.

Walker, who has worked on the Adams Papers Collection for the past 25 years said John Quincy Adams, like his father, was independent-minded.

Neither one particularly carried favor with people, she said. "They probably wouldn't make it today" as President, she added. "They were too independent; they believed they should do what they thought was right, rather than what the party wanted."

She said John Quincy Adams' diary is believed to be the longest kept by such a prominent American.

Loretta DeGrazia Selected For Top National Award

Loretta T. DeGrazia, president of East Coast Petroleum, Atlantic St., North Quincy, has been selected for a top national award.

She is one of six national winners of the annual Blue Chip Enterprise Initiative Award which will be presented in ceremonies in Washington, D.C. June 7-9.

DeGrazia was selected from 177 state candidates and 677 national nominees.

The awarded, Created by Mass Mutual, Nation's Business and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, honors business owners who have faced and overcome challenges and emerged from them stronger.

DeGrazia will also be featured in Nation's Business Magazine, publications of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce across the country and will be interviewed on CNN.

"The award is breathtaking," says DeGrazia, 43, the state's first and only woman founder-owner of a full-range heating oil company in a traditional male industry.

After 14 years in the business, she was confident to open her own company even though she didn't have a single customer, an office or an oil truck.

Within four years, she had 17 employees, five oil trucks, and sold nearly two million gallons of heating oil.

"We were really on a roll," she recalls. "There was no question about our future success. Then a serious mistake was made during my absence which appeared to be a 'planned mutiny.' As the corporate head I took my lumps, paid my fines, rebuilt the files that disappeared when I fired an entire operations department, and slowly earned back my reputation of integrity. The rest is happy history."

Two years later DeGrazia

LORETTA DeGRAZIA

and her staff turned her company around. She went on to be honored by earning the Woman of Distinction Award presented at Holy Cross College, was a nominee for Woman of the Year by a branch of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, and then won top honors from NEWBO for 1998.

Terry Francher, general manager of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, said: "We've been trying to get a candidate to Washington for many years, and now we have one in Loretta."

DeGrazia was nominated by Kenny Lloyd of the Commonwealth Financial Group out of Waltham.

At the April breakfast meeting of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce attended by DeGrazia and hosted by the Rockland Trust Bank, Ron Zooleck, SSCC's executive director announced the national award. She was congratulated at the meeting by Sen. John Kerry and Mayor James Sheets, who last October proclaimed a day in October as "Loretta DeGrazia Day."

The sad fact of the matter, said Raymond, is that seniors are making value judgments as to whether to eat nutritionally, pay a bill, pay their real estate tax or TV charge.

Quincy's ordinance would allow seniors within certain income guidelines a state income tax credit based on a specific formula: property taxes paid, minus 10 percent of annual income, multiplied by a specific income factor. Those with an income of $20,000 would be fully eligible, while those whose income exceeds $40,000 would receive no property tax credit.

Last fall, state Auditor Joseph DeNucci noted that exemptions for senior homeowners and their ceiling assets had not kept pace with inflation. The mandatory exemption of $500 for senior homeowners with incomes below $13,000 has not changed since 1986.

Today, he said, to keep pace with inflation, the income cap for eligibility would have to be raised to $20,500 for an individual, with an exemption of $1,800 to provide the elderly with the same level of property tax relief.

Fantucchio noted that Senate President Thomas Birmingham had filed S-1495 to provide assistance to low and moderate-income elderly property taxpayers, providing a cost-of-living adjustment on the allowed exemptions and total asset limits.

The bill is scheduled for a hearing sometime in mid-May. Under this bill a state income tax credit of not more than $750 would be granted to seniors over 65 who live in a residence valued at not more than $400,000. And whose total income does not exceed $40,000 for a single individual.

In addition, to determine the taxes and maximize the amount of credit, the cost of water and sewer charges would be included along with the amount of real estate taxes paid.

Fantucchio said many Quincy seniors could benefit from this bill.

Last year Quincy abated $631,613 in exemptions. Four hundred eighty-seven elderly homeowners received abatements totaling $241,000, while 806 veterans received abatements totaling nearly $200,000, Fantucchio stated.

In addition, state Rep. Bruce Ayers, who serves as Ward 6 councillor, has filed two separate bills. One, H-908, would lower the age limit from 70 to 65 for abatements to seniors; the other, H-909, would increase the property tax exemption presently allowed for disabled veterans from $175 to $350.

In addition, Ayers said that state Rep. John Rogers, D-Norwood, chairman of the Joint Committee on Taxation, has offered to provide technical assistance from his staff to help Quincy develop any other home rule petitions proposing property tax abatements to help Quincy residents.

lowed by 4 percent at six months.

The teachers argued they wanted to be paid comparably to surrounding communities, citing that both Weymouth and Braintree have higher starting teacher salaries for entry level teachers with only a bachelor's degree than Quincy has.

At last month's school committee at City Hall, the teachers turned out en masse to show their solidarity behind their negotiating team and urge a settlement. The teachers have been working without a contract since Aug. 31, 1998; negotiations for a new three-year contract began a year ago last February.

If the teachers reach an accord, only two other large bargaining units remain without contracts. Sheets said negotiations with the firefighters' union are moving along well and expected he, along with John Keenan, his executive secretary, would resume bargaining today (Thursday). The other large union without a contract is Local 925, which comprises about 150 mainly clerical employees.

Council Asks $250,000 For Legal Fees

man, to the subcommittee. "This is another quality-of-life issue," added Kolson. "We spend millions for the quality of life of the city," he said, citing infrastructure, police and fire and education as major examples.

He urged that the councillors unanimously approve the measure to ask the mayor to formally request the appropriation. Only councillor-at-large Francis X. McCauley opposed the idea.

McCauley was the lone vote among the eight councillors to favor the pared-down development proposal. Originally, Congress Group Ventures had proposed building 1,641 units, which would have included a larger senior assisted living complex.

In other business, the council, sitting as the special permit granting authority, unanimously approved some new rules pertaining to planned unit developments which had been previously introduced by McCauley.

One states that a public hearing must be set no later than 65 days after a special permit application has been filed and that a date not more than 90 days after the public hearing be set to vote on the proposal.

The other proposal pertains to criteria which must be considered as well, addressing such issues as to whether the proposal would be detrimental to surrounding uses, whether it can be planned in coordination with the surrounding area, whether the streets and utility services are adequate for the proposed development.

Parking spaces, landscaping and utility areas must be reviewed, and the proposal must include a specific schedule for development.

WARD 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi, who had recused himself from all discussions related to Highpoint, pushed to include other language in the new rules to correspond to similar procedures presently used by the planning board and zoning board of appeals.

He also questioned whether the $1,000 filing fee for a P.U.D. special permit was sufficient to compensate the city which must assign staff from numerous departments to review a P.U.D. proposal.

Kolson asked planning director Richard Meade to research what other communities of similar size charge for a P.U.D. review. "We've had good economic times in the last couple of years. I don't know if there is another comparable municipality," he said.

Raymondi also suggested adding new language to the city's bylaws which would make a distinction between the roles of city councillor and a member of the special permit granting authority.

McGrath interrupted the discussion, saying the matter hovered too closely to issues raised in the legal challenges filed by Congress Group Ventures.

Raymondi deferred, adding he would like to work with McGrath to develop a new fee structure and present recommendations to the councillors within the next 30 days.

Hospital Partner Choice Down To Two

The city of Quincy has narrowed down its choices of affiliation with Quincy Hospital to two — Boston Medical Center and Lifespan, the parent company of New England Medical Center.

Mayor James Sheets and Councillor-at-large Francis X. McCauley said negotiations with the parties have intensified during the past few weeks.

"We hope to define who we are interested in and are continuing to work within 10 days, by the end of the month," said Sheets. Previously, he said he wanted to see a formal arrangement established before the end of the hospital's fiscal year which is Sept. 30.

McCauley said he did not want to put a time frame on the conclusion of negotiations but said he would like to see a plan in place before the council adjourns for the summer.

"Once we get something in place, there will be a home rule petition," said McCauley, adding that the Legislature probably would be in session to act on the petition.

Quality At Wollaston Given 'C' Rating Sheets Vows $6 Million To Clean Beach Water

By MARILYN JACKSON

Mayor James Sheets has pledged to find up to $6 million to improve the water quality at the three-mile-long stretch of Wollaston Beach.

Sheets made the commitment at a waterfront press conference Tuesday.

"In the last five years Quincy has spent $6 million along The Strand and Hollis Avenue to find the cause of pollution" at the beach, said the mayor who noted he had never seen an ocean or a bay before coming to Quincy to attend Eastern Nazarene College 46 years ago. And a senior commendations. In addition, he said Quincy would apply for grants and no-interest loans from the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority for additional funds.

At a press conference Tuesday afternoon at Wollaston Beach during a light April shower, city and state dignitaries and members of the task force detailed the year-long study.

literally introduced him to the cold September waters.

"It's a sad thing for me to see red flags flying (warning of contamination) and no one in the water," said Sheets. "Wollaston Beach in the past has been home to thousands and thousands in the summer, where families could come and spend the whole day."

"It's an absolute shame to have a resource like Wollaston Beach and not be able to use it."

Sheets said he would use the sewer rehabilitation fund, which totals about $600,000, to help implement the task force's recommendations. Presently, partially treated sewage and storm-water runoff have polluted the waters along Wollaston Beach to the extent that swimming has been prohibited one out of three days during the past three years. That's the distressing part of the task force's message.

According to the task force, the MWRA, which is under court order to clean up Boston Harbor, has compiled data that indicate that Wollaston Beach has had more beach closures than any other Boston Harbor area beach in recent years due to high levels of fecal coliform. Wollaston Beach

Galvin Comes To Rescue With $15,000 Grant

Adams Crypt Will Open To Public May 1

By MARILYN JACKSON
Secretary of State William Galvin stood between the tombs of President John Adams and First Lady Abigail Smith Adams in the basement of The Church of the Presidents on Patriot's Day Monday afternoon and announced that the crypt will be open to the public this year after all.

Galvin, whose office oversees the Massachusetts

Historical Commission, said a $15,000 emergency grant will be provided to the United First Parish Church, Unitarian, so that the burial place of the nation's second and sixth Presidents and their wives could be open this season. The crypt actually belongs to the Adams Temple and School Fund, but the church owns the building.

In addition, Galvin said copies of several Adams-related documents now stored at the Massachusetts State Archives at Columbia Point could be provided to the church/museum for display.

"Not to have the crypt open would be an embarrassment to Massachusetts," said Galvin. The site is significantly important not only to tourism but to his-

Board Hears Progress Updates On 2 Restaurants

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO
Updates of two restaurants being renovated were heard at Tuesday's License Board meeting.

The Naked Fish Restaurant on 516 Adams St., formerly The Hollow, was scheduled to open in March, but due to "structural changes" according to Atty. Robert Fleming, the opening has been delayed until June.

The board gave permission to the owners to pledge their common victualer all-alcoholic license to Central Corporate Bank in Woburn.

Fleming said the owners of Naked Fish have seven facilities under construction at the present time in the Boston area, and are in the process of refinancing.

According to Fleming, the owners of the Naked Fish had a "game plan" for the renovation of the restaurant but had "gone astray" as some "best laid plans sometimes do," but they are now working with Building Inspector Walter White regarding the structural changes.

The other update was from Louis Cafe, 1269 Sea St. which was destroyed by fire almost two years ago.

John Boyd told the board that the "holes are dug, the fittings and the foundations are done." He said the sills and framing are next.

At the last board meeting, the owners said the name of the restaurant would be changed to Louis Crossing.

Boyd said they hope to open the 96 seat restaurant in "mid-summer."

The License Board requested that the owners return at the June 29 meeting for a further update.

Fire Chief Thomas Gorman was acting chairman due to the absence of Chairman Joseph Shea.

Students In Protest To Face Discipline

About 17 Quincy and North Quincy High School students demonstrated in Quincy Square Friday in protest of the conviction of a black reporter for a Philadelphia radio station who was accused of murdering a white police officer in 1981.

The students have taken up the cause of death-row inmate Mumia Abu-Jamal who is seeking support for a new trial. Popular music groups such as the Beastie Boys and Rage Against the Machine have staged concerts to raise funds for Abu-Jamal's efforts.

Last month, 18-year-old Quincy High School junior Jason Rivera began organizing an April 16 student walkout when school officials learned of his plans and told him he could not distribute leaflets or advocate a walkout. His leaflets were confiscated but were returned later to his father, said Rivera, who later handed them out off school property.

Earlier, he was allowed to show a video about Abu-Jamal, "A Case of Reasonable Doubt," in his psychology class.

School superintendent Eugene Creedon said the students who left the school without authorization will be disciplined. Rivera said he is scheduled to meet with high school principal Robert Keuther and assistant principal Marie Hurley at 11 a.m. today (Thursday) to discuss disciplinary measures, which could mean a 10-day suspension.

"They want to take care of this now so I won't go back to school Monday," said Rivera. He said he believed the other students who participated in the walkout were to meet with the principal as well before the spring school vacation ends.

Superintendent Creedon was not available for comment but had told other media the students could have voiced their concerns just as well after school as during class time.

Meanwhile, Rivera and his fellow students are involved in organizing through the Internet a local chapter of Refuse & Resist which aims to fight injustice and censorship and protest the war in Kosovo.

Cleaner, Greener Quincy May 8

Mayor James Sheets announces that the 10th annual Cleaner, Greener Quincy celebration will be held Saturday, May 8 from 9 a.m. to noon.

Volunteers can report to various assigned locations throughout the city to help clean up their neighborhood parks, playgrounds, school yards, and open space areas. Rain date for the event will be Saturday, May 15.

An average of approximately 1,250 people have volunteered annually to help make Quincy cleaner and greener. In the past 10 years, there have been more than 3,000 tons of debris cleaned by volunteers and city personnel, according to the Park Department.

The emphasis of this year's celebration will be commemorating the success of the program. Along with the regular cleaning objective the Park & Forestry Department will ask volunteers to assist in planting a tree at designated locations. The planting sites will be announced later.

"Through the assistance and dedication of our volunteers, Cleaner, Greener Quincy has become more than a one-day clean-up; it is a year-round commitment to

All volunteers will receive a Cleaner, Greener T-shirt for their hard work.

This year's Cleaner, Greener T-shirt will be a special tenth anniversary edition to be unveiled in the coming weeks.

All volunteers are invited to attend an appreciation cook-out hosted by Sheets at the Koch Family Park & Recreation Complex in Merrymount Park after the clean-up. The cookout will begin at 12:30 p.m. and is sponsored by Stop & Shop.

"I remember our first year when we removed everything from old refrigerators, car engines, boats, and a variety of items from out city's parks, beaches and open space areas", Sheets said. "Over the past few years, our city is noticeably cleaner and we hope to commemorate our success through the planting of a beautiful new tree that will serve as a sign of our continued commitment to a cleaner and greener Quincy."

Millennium Program Begins April 28 At Adams Shore Library

The Thomas Crane Public Library is among 27 libraries across the state selected by the Massachusetts Foundation for the Humanities for a reading and discussion program developed especially for the millennium.

"Entitled 'Ends of Civilization: Taking Stock on the Eve of the Millennium,' the five-part program examines the status of politics and government, science, education, the environment and social relations in America. It explores the question, 'Where do we go from here?'"

The program will consist of five sessions held two weeks apart beginning Wednesday, April 28, at 7 p.m. at the Adams Shore Branch Library, 519 Sea St. The program is open to the public free of charge, but participation is limited to the first 30 registrants.

The series begins with "The End of Education: Redefining the Value of School" by Neil Postman and concludes with Francis Fukuyama's "The End of History and the Last Man." Also included are Orlando Patterson's "The Ordeal of Integration: Progress and Resentment in America's 'Racial' Crisis"; Bill McKibben's "The End of Nature" and John Horgan's "The End of Science: Facing the Limits of Knowledge in the Twilight of the Scientific Age."

The books are being provided by the Humanities Foundation and loaned to the first 30 registered participants through the library. Those who register should be prepared to make a commitment to the full series.

Each two-hour session will begin with a brief presentation by a specially trained humanities scholar, teacher or writer who will then lead the discussion. Scholars include scientists, historians, political scientists, philosophers, journalists and ecologists drawn from Massachusetts colleges and other cultural institutions.

"Ends of Civilization" theme brochures describing the program in more detail are available at the library. For more information or to register, contact Jane Granstrom at the main library, 40 Washington St., Quincy Square, or call (617) 376-1331.

A Real Dedicated Mayor

Quincy has been blessed with some good mayors down through the years.

But for dedication and determination above and beyond the call of duty, the honor would seem to go to one: John Miller.

He is the only one of the 28 men who have served as Quincy mayor to die in office.

And there is an interesting footnote to that says Frank McCauley, four-term mayor and present city councillor who is writing "A Political History of Quincy."

McCAULEY

He came across the nugget while doing research for the book which will be published as part of the city's millennium celebration.

Miller was elected in 1913 and took office in 1914.

"The city was under its original charter back then and the mayor was elected for a one-year term," McCauley notes.

The charter, McCauley says, provided that a special election would be called if a mayor vacated the office before the last 90 days of his term.

Miller, sometime after taking office, was diagnosed with cancer with little hope for survival.

It meant that if he died or left office before Oct. 5, a special election would have to be called for a successor.

McCauley says Miller had a deathbed wish.

"As he lay dying," says McCauley, "he said he wished he would live long enough to spare the city the cost of a special election."

Miller, he says, lived to Oct. 6—beating the special election requirement by just one day. He was 60.

McCauley, who during his eight years in the mayor's office built a reputation as a fiscally tight-fisted chief executive, has deep admiration for Miller.

"I applaud him," says McCauley. "Imagine lying there dying and thinking of just living long enough to save the city money. He certainly was a true conservative."

Joseph Whiton, who was the city council president, filled out the remaining days of Miller's term. Chester Campbell was elected to take office in 1915. Whiton was elected in 1916—the first Quincy mayor to serve a two-year term.

McCauley, a Quincy political historian, was asked by Mayor James Sheets to write the book.

It will cover 111 years—beginning in 1889 when Quincy changed from a town to a city government.

McCauley is up to 1998 and, of course, has to wait until the end of the year to complete 1999. This year's election and some of today's issues will be included.

The final chapter: the mayor's inaugural address Jan. 3, 2000.

And the mayor will be James Sheets, beginning his sixth term.

The usual length of Daylight Savings Time (from the last Sunday in April to the last Sunday in October) was lengthened in 1974 (January 6 to October 27) and 1975 (February 23 to October 26) to conserve energy.

JOHN MILLER

(Photo Courtesy Quincy Historical Society)

"Hopefully the book will be in print by the Spring of 2000," says McCauley.

And, for the city, you might say the price is right. McCauley is doing the research and writing the chapters in long-hand. His wife, Sandra, then types them.

It's a labor of love for both.
No fee.

SPEAKING OF QUINCY history, no one is certain of the first name of Captain Wollaston who settled Mount Wollaston in 1625.

But the name Wollaston is quite common.

City Councillor Paul Harold discovered that the other day while checking the Boston Marathon website to look up the number his campaign manager, Mike Linnane of Anderson Rd. was wearing in the race.

Harold says that when he typed in Wollaston, he was surprised to find 7,007 listings for that.

Among them: Wollaston College in Perth, Australia; Wollaston Lake in Saskatchewan, Canada; a British chemist named William Wollaston, born 1776; and an Elizabeth Wollaston of Delaware born in 1655.

But no solution to the Captain Wollaston mystery. (The guessing is that his first name was John.)

NICOLSON

WJDA's John Nicolson, one of the real classy guys in the broadcasting field and in the community, will undergo hip surgery today (Thursday) at Brigham & Women's Hospital. He will be sidelined for a little while.

QUINCY BUSINESSMAN Dick Barker is a patient at the Braintree Rehabilitation Hospital, where he is undergoing therapy after open heart surgery at Deaconess Hospital and suffering a stroke four weeks ago.

Dick owns Barker's Stationery store is a past president of the Quincy Center Business and Professional Association.

If you'd like to visit or drop him a card, he is in Room 219. The address is 250 Pond St., Braintree.

SHARRON BEALS, executive director of the Beechwood Community Life Center is taking it easy at home following shoulder surgery at Beth Israel Hospital last Wednesday.

She is reported as "doing well" and anxious to get back to work.

WE REPORTED HERE a couple weeks ago that Mayor James Sheets and First Lady, Joann, are excited about two grandchildren due to arrive in September.

Daughter, Kim, and her husband, Steven Woodward of the Atlanta, Ga., area are expecting twins then.

What we neglected to mention was that there are two more grandparents just as excited: Arthur and Lois Woodward of Braintree.

Arthur, of course, is retired from the Quincy school system and is now director of the Professional Development Institute at Eastern Nazarene College.

Laws Won't Prevent Road Rage

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

As a police sergeant for the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health, I have often found myself frustrated by outrageous drivers on the road. As I travel between Quincy and Boston via the Southeast Expressway, I know road rage happens too often.

When someone is doing it to you, you wish there was a static near you but the highway is too long and cruisers too few. Everyone said road rage should be against the law, but it already is, isn't it?

Recently, State Rep. Vincent Ciampa, D-Somerville filed a bill with the Clerk's Office and a public hearing has already been held by the Public Safety Committee. Who could be against this bill? However, the real important question is: Do we need another law? Aren't there laws on the books against assault or driving to endanger?

What good are these legislation anyway if there aren't enough police to enforce it? Road rage is dangerous but there are many other things happening out there worthy of immediate law enforcement. I feel a road rage bill is a piece of feel good legislation. It sounds like we're doing something when we're not doing much at all.

Road rage happens in an instant and unless a police officer is in eye view, what good would this new law be? Things like laws against road rage of laws creating sex offender registration for example, are only good when people follow the rules.

Just as sex offenders registry won't keep society safe from sexual predators, a road rage law won't protect us from passive-aggressive drivers out there on the road near us.

Most police I know have few objections to things like road rage bills because the idea of cracking down on road rage sounds good. However, most police I know also understand passing laws is not always the answer. Laws don't prevent road rage and a $500 fine will mean little to a driver who has "lost it" on the road. His or her rage is out of control. Most times they get away with their rage and we, their victims, are glad to see their tail lights vanish into the horizon. We write off their road rage as a slice of daily driving gone bad.

I'm sure Rep. Ciampa means well but his bill is somewhat meaningless and we won't make our roads any safer than they already are without his new bill. Here's hoping the Quincy House Delegation thinks twice before voting for yet, this latest feel good measure.

Article On Alicia Corea Local Coverage At Its Best

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

Your article entitled: "Alicia Corea: A Special Milestone" represents local coverage at its best.

So often our churches in our midst seem invisible except for their visible buildings. Hopefully, other readers were spiritually blessed as well and will start to remember Sunday worship and all those who care for God's house every day year in and year out.

We have such a rich heritage of religious freedom in our country that our forefathers argued so tenaciously for with words we so often never even give it a thought until the need for God in our lives becomes important to us once again as individuals.

In the meantime, until that awakening moment, we take it for granted that God's community will always be there for us when needed.

Mayor Wants Ike's Help For Shipyard Jobs

By PAUL HAROLD

Mayor David McIntosh called upon President Eisenhower to correct the "bungling job" done by Washington bureaucrats that cost Fore River three tanker contracts worth $33 million.

April 22 - 28
46 Years Ago

This week, World Tankers, Inc., laid a keel at Fore River, but future work was put off when the Maritime Administration turned down the company for additional contracts. Admiral Edward Cochrane, dean of the school of engineering at MIT, then the chairman of the Maritime Administration, defended his decision noting that World Tankers' president Stavros Niarchos was under federal investigation and that the new ships would fly under the flag of Liberia and not the U.S.

NEASE LIBRARY DEDICATED AT ENC

The $190,000 library at Eastern Nazarene College was dedicated this week, named after the college's second president, Dr. Floyd Nease.

College president Dr. Edward Mann and Dr. Stacy Southward, chairman of the state Board of Free Library Commissioners, presided at the dedication ceremonies. Southward noted the college's growth from the purchase of the campus of the old Quincy Mansion School around 1900 to present day. Of Dr. Nease he said, "Floyd was a man of exceptional constancy and devotion who dearly loved his college and who unselfishly served it."

The new facility could accommodate 120 students in its reading room with a capacity for 60,000 books.

NEW YORK REP. NOONAN VISITS CITY

Quincy native, New York Assemblyman Leo Noonan, visited Quincy while he was meeting in Boston with legislators on auto insurance reform.

Noonan's family in Quincy included his son, John, on Cranch St. and sisters Mrs. Joseph Brophy on Manet Ave. and Mrs. Charles Keating on Pontiac Rd. His father John was coachman for Archbishop John Williams (for whom the high school was named) and later ran a grocery store on Babcock St. with his wife Johanna (Gorman).

A former newspaperman and editor, he had the distinction of winning the nomination of both the Democratic and Republican parties for Norfolk County commissioner in 1913. Unfortunately, he was unable to be sworn in because there could be no more than one commissioner per community. Quincy resident John Merrill was already on the board.

ENC Gospel Choir Spring Concert April 24

The Gospel Choir at Eastern Nazarene College (ENC) will present its second annual spring concert entitled "God Is..."

at the Twelfth Baptist Church in Roxbury, Saturday, April 24 at 7 p.m. Tanya N. Miller, a sophomore psychology and education major, directs the 30-member choir that uses an urban, contemporary music style to present the gospel.

The ENC Gospel Choir has performed concerts before various audiences; at the Martin Luther King breakfast in Quincy, hosted by the District Attorney's in January, and in public schools and churches in the greater Boston area, New England, New York and New Jersey.

Dr. Kent Hill, president of ENC, comments:

"One of the most exciting new groups to emerge from within the student body of Eastern Nazarene College in recent years has been the Gospel Choir. This unique choir is genuinely multicultural and their love for their music, each other and God is deeply infectious. The choir radiates love and enthusiasm. The ENC Gospel Choir is a delight to experience."

Renee Whetstone, a third year social work major, second year choir member and choir board member, said, "It is a chance to spread God's message of love in a highly exciting environment."

You may not know the spike pattern can be modified by term "sesamoiditis," but if you're a golf enthusiast, you may be familiar with its symptoms: intense pain and swelling in the ball of the foot in the area of the sesamoid bones. This pain is one golf "handicap," however, that is easily avoided. The remedy may be as simple as making a prudent selection when purchasing new golf shoes. The culprit? Your body weight, pressing on a spike directly beneath the ball of the foot, compounded by the distance walked in a round of golf, is the cause. You needn't even buy new shoes, the existing

ELAINE and PETER ZOIA
Celebrating Their 60th Anniversary

AND ON THEIR Wedding Day

Peter And Elaine Zoia Celebrate 60th Wedding Anniversary

Peter and Elaine Zoia of North Quincy celebrated their 60th anniversary with the renewal of their vows at Sacred Heart Church.

Officiating at the service was their son-in-law, Deacon Joseph Nickley of Abington. A reception hosted by their 12 children followed at the Red Parrot Restaurant in Hull.

Mr. and Mrs. Zoia were married April 19, 1939 at Sacred Heart Church, North Quincy. Mrs. Zoia is the former Elaine Martineau. Both are natives of North Quincy and live in the house where Mrs. Zoia was born.

Mr. Zoia worked as a Supervisor of Inspection at Instron Engineering in Canton before retiring in 1980.

He was a football captain at North Quincy High School in 1935 and an assistant football coach for many years there.

Since Mrs. Zoia had been a fan and ardent team supporter, both have been inducted into the North Quincy High School Football Hall of Fame.

Mrs. Zoia is a member of the Sacred Heart Sodality and Mr. Zoia was a member of the Sacred Heart Church Council Board.

Their children are: Janet Campbell of Scituate, Joanne Kelly of Quincy, Carol Goward of Bow, N.H., Cheryl Paul of Sarasota, Fla., Beverly Gregory of Quincy, Barbara Younie of Randolph, Paul Zoia of Orlando, Fla., Regina Galasso of Houston, Tex., Rhonda Nickley of Abington, Gregory Zoia of Nashua, N.H., Gayle Ayoub, and Dean Zoia, both of Quincy.

Susan Martin Hayes Tribute To Inaugurate Woodward Scholarship Fund

The students and staff of the Woodward School for Girls are planning a tribute to inaugurate a Scholarship Fund in memory of Susan Martin Hayes, Woodward Dean of Students and a long-time teacher who died suddenly last August.

The event will be co-sponsored by the John F. Kennedy Library Foundation and held at the Library on the evening of June 2. The fund will honor a graduating senior with a love of history, the origins and growth of government and its political dynamics as well as an interest in and appreciation of teaching. These are the subjects Mrs. Hayes stressed.

Mrs. Hayes also had a great devotion to the Kennedy Library. It became an important historical research center for teaching programs, and she made numerous field trips there with her classes as well as enrolling in the Library's many educational courses.

Next to her family, Mrs. Hayes loved teaching, a career which began upon graduation from Boston State College in the Boston school system and in several suburban schools. Wherever her husband's career took his family to such remote areas as Kuwait and Colorado, she taught school.

Her greatest teaching joy was at the Woodward School where for 16 years she challenged the minds of the young women with a "strict but fair" approach to learning. Thomas L. Wesner, Headmaster, said that "Sue affected the lives of many in the Woodward Community. She leaves quite a legacy and is sorely missed."

Mrs. Hayes, the daughter of long-time Quincy residents, Edward and Marguerite Martin, was raised in Quincy, attended St. Mary's Parochial School, and St. Gregory's High School in Dorchester. She was active in many Quincy community and charitable affairs. She leaves her husband, Patrick and three children.

The June 2 event will include tours of the Library's exhibits, beginning at 6 p.m., a reception, a buffet dinner at 8 p.m., followed by a program by students and staff, at which the first scholarship recipient will be honored.

Quincy Named 'Tree City USA' For Third Consecutive Year

Quincy has been designated as a "Tree City USA" by the National Arbor Day Foundation for the third consecutive year at a recent State Forestry Conference at Old Sturbridge Village.

The award was given to Quincy for its commitment to planting and maintaining trees. On hand to accept the award was Park-Forestry-Cemetery Department Executive Director Thomas Koch.

"It is a great achievement to receive this award for the third consecutive year. Mayor James Sheets and the City Council have been most supportive of our efforts to plant and maintain our beautiful tree-line streets, parks, and cemeteries," Koch said.

Quincy also received a National Arbor Day Foundation "Growth Award" for implementing progressive new programs in regard to education and stewardship of the urban forest. Quincy was recognized for its "Yard Care Conference," "Neat Neighbors," contest, Arbor Day celebration, and numerous other educational and stewardship programs.

"I appreciate the National Arbor Day Foundation's recognition in our attempts to incorporate our entire community into the maintenance and appreciation of our city's many trees. We try to share our view of the planting and protection of trees as a sound investment in the future of our city," Koch added. "The response of the people of Quincy has been fantastic."

Quincy has planted 600 new trees along the city's streets in the past year. In addition, 108 new trees were added to the Mount Wollaston Cemetery through the Department of Environmental Management's (DEM) Historic Landscape Restoration Grant Program. The city also participates in the DEM's Mass ReLeaf grant program, with the Keohane Funeral Homes, that provides money for tree-planting in the memory of local citizens who have died.

"Our goal will now be to earn the 'Tree City' award for a fourth consecutive year," Koch said. "We hope to work with Mayor Sheets, the City Council, and the people of Quincy to build upon the successful tree planting and advocacy programs that are currently in place."

Easy Bread Pudding

One of our faithful readers called me one day at the office and asked if I had an easy recipe for bread pudding. I promised her I would print one within a few weeks, so here it is.

Bread pudding can be made with raisin bread, day old bread, with or without raisins, nuts, but Today's is for just plain fresh bread, with raisins added as an option.

Easy Bread Pudding
8 slices buttered bread
1 cup raisins
4 eggs
1 cup sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons vanilla
4 cups milk
(I sometime add a little nutmeg to my recipe)

Cut butter bread into half-inch wide strips. Arrange in layers in a buttered baking dish. Sprinkle each layer with the raisins.

Beat eggs, add sugar, salt, vanilla and milk. Mix well and then pour over the bread. Garnish top with the raisins and bake in a 325 degree oven for about an hour. (serves 6 to 8)

(Marie D'Olimpio has written a cookbook with recipe printed in The Quincy Sun.)

They are available at the Fruit Basket (next to Star Market), Previte's Market on Sumner St., Nanci's Barbershop, Elm St., Braintree, Curry's Hardware, Copeland St., and the Cherry Gift Shop at Quincy Hospital.)

Morrissey Co-Sponsors Bill To Assist World War II Vets Obtain High School Diplomas

State Sen. Michael Morrissey has co-sponsored legislation that would enable World War II veterans who left high school to fight in the war to obtain their high school diplomas.

In the 1940's, many young men left high school to serve in the Armed Forces during World War II. Many of these individuals never found their way back to school to continue their education.

Morrissey, working with Sen. Stephen Brewer of Barre in conjunction with the Department of Veterans' Services, has filed a bill that would enable these soldiers to obtain a diploma from the high school they were attending at the time.

Certain school districts have already begun to honor World War II veterans in this way. However, this bill would provide the means for every school district to do so.

"This is one small gesture in recognizing the immense sacrifices made by men and women who have served in World War II," Morrissey said. "It is their sacrifices that have enabled the rest of the country to live free and proud."

"I am honored to have the opportunity to participate in filing this bill in recognition of World War II veterans. It is also a way for bringing generations together through an educational experience and give a positive example to today's teenagers," Morrissey added.

Like to be mortgage-free by the time you retire?

Trade your current 30-year mortgage in for a 15-Year Mortgage from Colonial Federal Savings Bank. The monthly payment's a bit higher, but chances are you're earning more now and it's a great form of "forced saving." The benefits? You lock in your mortgage at the lowest rates seen since the 1960s, you save tens of thousands of dollars in interest, you build equity faster and—by the time you retire—you'll be mortgage-free! It's what people dream of and right now the dream is closer than ever.

Come see us and we'll run the numbers for you. Or call Richard or Angela at 617-471-0750.

Retiring Old Appliances Good For The Consumer And The Environment

R3=W2. It might look like quantum physics, but Whirlpool devised the cryptic equation to mean this: What is good for the appliance consumer is also good for the environment.

R3 is Whirlpool's code name to replace, retire and recycle old appliances. W2 stands for win-win - situation enjoyed by people who replace older, less efficient household appliances with new, more efficient appliances.

Whirlpool builds all of its appliances to last a long time. When people replace older appliances with newer, more energy efficient models, they will automatically see lower utility bills and make an environmentally-friendly change.

Consider the following comparisons. In 1972, the average top-mount refrigerator consumed 2546 KWH and cost about $210 to operate for a year. Today, a 22-cubic-foot top-mount uses about 760 KWH and costs about $65 a year.

Widespread participation in the idea behind retiring and replacing old appliances could mean the equivalent of taking five million cars off American highways by the year 2010! It could mean $10 billion in energy savings for consumers.

Whirlpool, as the world's leading manufacturer and home appliances marketer, takes great pride in helping promote ways to save energy and help the environment. Encouraging consumers to retire old appliances is just part of Whirlpool's commitment to A Job Well Done™.

So, when you're wondering about what to do with the refrigerator you inherited with the house 25 years ago, remember the Whirlpool code: R3=W2.

What Is The Average Life Of Appliances?

While they don't get taxed, death is an eventuality, even for faithful appliances. The list at the top of this column, compiled by Whirlpool assistants, shows the average useful life of major home appliances.

Quincy Recycling Commission Wins Environmental Award

The Quincy Recycling Commission has been awarded an "Outstanding Activist" for its work to increase participation in the Quincy recycling program.

The award was presented to Sally Owen, chairwoman of the Commission, by the Recycling Initiative Campaign at the Toxics Action '99 Conference.

"The Quincy Recycling Commission is one of the most ambitious and creative groups we've worked with this year," said Vivien Watts of the Recycling Initiative Campaign. "They have big plans for boosting Quincy's recycling rate."

The Quincy Recycling Commission is planning a "Blue Bin Instant Win" campaign which will award cash prizes to randomly selected Quincy residents participating in the recycling program. Commission members believe that the eight week campaign will get more people into the habit of recycling.

The conference also featured a keynote speech by Paul Brodeur, an investigative journalist noted for alerting the nation to the risks posed by asbestos, the hole in the ozone layer, and power lines. John DeVillars, the administrator of EPA's New England office, gave closing remarks on the importance of citizen activism.

The conference was organized by the Toxics Action Center and sponsored by the Recycling Initiative Campaign. Since 1987, the Toxics Action Center has assisted more than 225 neighborhood groups in their fights against hazards in their communities. Toxics action '99 is the Toxics Action Center's 13th annual conference.

Recycling Compost Bin Sale Saturday

The Quincy Recycling Commission will celebrate Earth Day by hosting a compost bin sale and demonstration at Home Depot on Willard St., Saturday, April 24, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Bins, at $20 each, are less than 50 percent of the cost of most commercially available bins. One bin may be purchased per household while supplies last.

Compost bins held hold in heat and moisture, keep animals out and look more attractive than open compost heaps. Organic material will start to turn to compost in the bins in three to six months.

Known as "black gold," to gardeners, compost replenishes nutrients in the soil, helps retain moisture, makes the soil easy to work and helps plants resist disease. At the same time, turning your leaves, kitchen scraps and soiled paper to compost can reduce your garbage by as much as 50 percent and help the environment.

Quincy residents unable to come to Home Depot may obtain a compost bin for $20 weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Department of Public Works, 55 Sea St., while supplies last. Call 376-1901 for more information.

To learn more about composting, check out the video entitled, "Home Composting: Turning Your Spoils to Soil" from the Quincy Public Library or watch for it on Quincy Access Television.

Environmental Awareness Day At Eastern Nazarene College

Eastern Nazarene College will promote environmental consciousness in the community at its third annual Environmental Awareness Day on Tuesday, April 27.

Lois Adams, regional coordinator for the Urban Environmental Initiative at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's New England office, will be the keynote speaker and will address issues of environmental justice as they relate to local communities.

Events are scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. in the ENC Student Center where the students of Professor Jonathan Twining's "Introduction to Environmental Science" class will display their research projects about environmental issues and sell plants as a fund raising activity for the Ecology Club in Sighisoara, Romania.

Several clean-up events will follow at Furnace Brook, Sailor's Pond and Black Creek. Students and the community will participate in practical, hands-on ways to improve the environment.

Through this event

Twining hopes to make the campus and community aware of environmental dilemmas facing our society. Student presentations will focus on issues concerning pollution, natural resource use and water and energy conservation.

Evening seminars will discuss environmental justice.

"Those who suffer the most are often those who are least able to defend themselves: minorities, the poor, and the children," said Twining, the event coordinator. "Many are forced to live in urban areas, surrounded by inordinate levels of pollution, but are too poor to fight or move. Children are raised in homes where they are exposed to lead levels so high that they develop abnormally."

The theme for Environmental Awareness Day is that everyone is responsible for the poor quality of the environment: all people use natural resources and produce garbage. Twining points out that the poor state of the environment has already taken its toll on the quality of human health -- asthma and respiratory problems, diarrhea and other water borne diseases and lead poisoning are some results of unattended problems.

James Harder Public Info Director For Sheriff's Office

Sheriff Michael Bellotti has named James Harder of Boston as Director of Public Information for the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office.

Harder, 36, joins the Sheriff's Office after more than eight years of experience as a community journalist in Kansas, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts. Harder also served as Bellotti's communications director during his campaign for sheriff last year.

Prior to working on the Bellotti campaign, Harder was editor of The Daily Transcript and the West Roxbury Transcript. The Daily Transcript is one of several daily newspapers in Norfolk County. He worked previously as a reporter for both the Transcript and the Kent County Daily Times in West Warwick, R.I.

"With his background as reporter and editor, James brings an appreciation of the public trust that we hold her at the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office," Bellotti said. "He and I will work together to ensure that this office and this correctional institution is always open and accessible to the public it serves."

JAMES HARDER

Harder was a Peace Corps volunteer in Gabon in central Africa from 1985 - 87. He is a graduate of the University of Kansas and has a masters degree in international relations from the University of Chicago.

Hiring A Good Mover, Timing Start Moving Process Right

If you're one of the approximately 42 million Americans who may move this year, you want to consider two things about now: hiring a good, professional mover and the timing of your move.

"Hiring a good mover requires being a smart consumer, not just picking an unknown company out of the Yellow Pages," says J. Martin McLaughlin, president of McLaughlin Transportation Systems, Inc., an agent for Mayflower Transit, Inc.

McLaughlin offers the following tips:

- Check with friends and neighbors to see if they can recommend a mover.
- Call your local Better Business Bureau or consumer office about complaints.
- Obtain the names of two or three movers from the Yellow Pages or companies you've seen around town.

• Visually inspect the companies' place of business to see what shape their trucks are in and if the premises look clean and organized.

• If you're moving from one state to another, your mover must have authority to move interstate from the Federal Highway Administration. Call (703) 280-4001 to confirm.

• Call the American Moving and Storage Association's membership department at (703) 683-7410 to see if the mover is a member or if you want to confirm that a company is an agent for a van line.

"Timing of your move is also an important consideration," McLaughlin noted, offering the following advice:

• Avoid moving at the beginning and end of the month when the schedules of most moving companies are filled because leases run out and mortgage and rent payments begin.

• Save both time and overtime rates by planning your move for a weekday instead of busy weekends.

• The worst time of year to move is around the three summer holiday weekends: Memorial Day, Independence Day and Labor Day. They are long weekends.

"If you choose a good mover and pick the middle of the week and month to move, you'll be off to a great start," McLaughlin said.

McLaughlin Transportation Systems, Inc. is a member of the American Moving and Storage Association, the professional moving industry's national trade association. For a free brochure on moving, call McLaughlin at (800) 258-6683.

DANIEL J. FLYNN & Co. recently brokered the sale of this building at 299 Newport Ave., Wollaston.

Flynn & Co. Sells Newport Ave. Building

Daniel J. Flynn & Co. recently brokered the sale of 299 Newport Ave. in Wollaston.

Flynn & Co. Assistant Vice President Dennis Croke negotiated the sale.

The two-story facility sold for $387,500 to J&D Realty Trust as an investment property. While the first floor of the 12,000 square foot building is a retail storefront, the second story is home to several small offices.

Flynn & Co. President Paul Talkowski said the property is ideally located for a variety of uses.

"This is a high traffic corner location in one of Quincy's busiest streets, and offers direct access to the Red Line at the Wollaston MBTA station. The location is very visible and accessible spot for retail or for office use," Talkowski said.

Daniel J. Flynn & Co. is a full service real estate firm specializing in commercial sales and leasing, residential real estate and real estate auctions. For more information, call 617-479-7900.

Sailors Home Pond Receives $10,000 Matching Grant

Sailors Home Pond has been awarded a $10,000 matching grant from the state's Department of Environmental Management (DEM) to supplement a storm drain evaluation study.

"The study will determine the total discharge going into the pond and ways to improve stormwater quality," said Sen. Michael Morrissey.

"In addition, the grant will be used to inform residents in the Beechwood Knoll area about other ways they can work to improve the pond's water quality," said Rep. Bruce Ayers.

"Sailors Pond is an invaluable resource and I'm thrilled that it will receive a grant award from the state in 1999," said Rep. Steve Tobin.

The individual matching grant award for Sailors Pond is one of 38 projects receiving funding from DEM's fiscal year 1999 Lake and Pond Grant Program Awards. In its sixth year, the grant program helps local organizations and cities and towns protect, preserve and enhance their lakes and ponds.

"The City of Quincy and all involved in restoring Sailors Pond have done an outstanding job in proving the project's worthiness for state funding. The city's ongoing commitment to restoring Sailors Pond by matching DEM's grant award must be commended," Morrissey said.

Mary Dawson Elected A MAR Director

Mary E. Dawson, a broker/manager with Century 21 Annex Realty, Inc. in Quincy has been elected a director of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR) for 1999.

As a state director, Dawson will represent the membership of the South Shore Association of Realtors on issues brought before the MAR Board of Directors at its three meetings. In addition, she will attend regional caucuses held periodically throughout the year, and is responsible for keeping the local Realtor membership informed on public policy issues, financial matters, and organizational activities conducted by the state association.

A Realtor since 1979, Dawson currently serves on the MAR Issues Work Group Committees.

Previously a state director last year, Dawson is a former chairperson of the MAR Government Affairs Committee and a past member of its Realtors Political Action Committee Association.

She has earned her Graduate, Realtors Institute (GRI) professional designation and is a past president of the South Shore and Metro South Chapters of W.C.R.

Organized in 1924, the Massachusetts Association of Realtors is a voluntary trade organization with more than 15,000 members. The term Realtor is registered as the exclusive designation of members of the National Association of Realtors.

Conway & Co. Named First In 'Brand Awareness' Survey

A Washington-based survey of Southeastern Massachusetts shows Jack Conway & Company has "TOMA" or "Top of Mind Awareness" meaning people associate Conway with the real estate industry.

A recent telephone survey of households throughout the South Shore and Southeastern Massachusetts asked the following question: "When you think of a Realtor, who do you think of first?" More people named Jack Conway and Company than any other real estate company in the southeast region. Century 21 and Re/Max came in second and third, respectively.

"We conduct these surveys all over the country, and as you might expect, the 'big guns' like the Circuit City and Stop & Shop usually have "top of the mind awareness" over the neighborhood shops," said Peter Schenck of TOMA Research/American Consulting Services in Vancouver, Wash.

"But it's always nice to see a locally owned business at the top of their category. You know that the money earned by big conglomerates is sent right back to their home based in Virginia or somewhere else, but the local business funnels its profits right back into its community," Schenck said. "It's a real tribute to Jack Conway and his group that their "brand" is first in name awareness for the Realtor category."

Chairman Jack Conway attributes his "TOMA" results to 41 years of "plugging away" at the business of real estate, 365 days a year.

"We've been out there in the community since 1957 helping meet the real estate needs of our customers, but it goes beyond that," said Conway. "Conway Realtors are active members of their cities or towns. We serve on the PTOs, chambers of commerce, religious organizations, and Welcome Wagon committees.

"We're your neighbors, and that's why people think of us first when they think of real estate. People do business with people they know, and that will never change," Conway added.

Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company is the largest independently owned real estate company in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

The City of Quincy will receive $614,676 in 1998 Homeless Assistance Funds from HUD for two separate programs, announce Mayor James Sheets and the Department of Planning and Community Development.

The HUD funds, allocated to eradicate homelessness, will be shared by Quincy Interfaith Sheltering Coalition (QISC) and Quincy Housing Authority (QHA).

QISC will receive $275,076 in funds under HUD's 1998 Homeless Assistance Continuum of Care Program to operate a program called the "South Shore Housing - Employment Initiative Program." Over the next three years, the program will link homeless persons to job placement; and assist them in securing appropriate transitional, permanent-supportive or permanent housing. Housing supportive services will also be provided for program participants.

QHA will receive $339,600 over the next five years for the Shelter Plus Care Program. SPOTLIGHT ON HEALTH & FITNESS

How We Cope With Stress Impacts Our Health

Some 50 years ago, the word "stress" was an engineering term that applied to bridges.

Today, that term poses major implications for human health and well-being. Stress has catapulted into a $9.4 billion industry as Americans seek to buy peace of mind through food, alcohol, illegal drugs, medications and psychotherapy.

A certain amount of stress is healthy; it drives us to perform--to do our best. But too much stress which can take the shape of demanding bosses, tight deadlines and dramatic lifestyle changes, such as the birth of a baby or death of a loved one can tax the body's defenses.

How we cope with stress can have a major impact on our health, said Florine Mark, president and chief executive of the WW Group, Inc., the largest franchise of Weight Watchers International.

The key to dealing with stress, according to Mark, lies in adopting healthy coping mechanisms, lowering your stress level and in striking a balance between work, family and relaxation.

A serious commitment to a healthier lifestyle has to be made in order to maintain a healthy body," she says. "Stress has become a major health issue, with links to heart disease, high blood pressure and obesity."

Tips For Dealing With Stress

- Walk your way to peace of mind. Exercise, exercise, exercise. It is a widely accepted fact that regular physical exercise benefit's one physical and mental well-being. Health professionals say regular aerobic exercise can relieve depression, anxiety, relieve stress and increase self-esteem.

Exercise makes the heart pump faster, improves circulation and builds stamina. So we have more energy to perform our daily tasks. Moreover, exercise relieves tension held in the muscles, which allows us to relax and concentrate on something other than our problems.

- Don't have 30 minutes to spend daily on exercise? Then start with simple changes. Get off the bus a stop earlier. Park the car away from the mall entrance. Take the stairs, rather than the elevator. Walk around your office building a few times a day. Walk the family dog. Plant a garden. Weed a garden. Just move more.

- Build some "me" time into every day.

Look at your social, school and work obligations. Which ones do you enjoy. Which ones do you do because you "should?" Start by reducing the number of "shoulds" in your life. You will feel better and love yourself more. Take a bath, surrounding yourself with scented candles. Lock the bathroom door.

Read a book. If you don't have much time, choose a book of inspiration poems. Read one or two a day. Make it part of your ritual.

- Develop a daily ritual.

We are creatures of habit. You will sleep more soundly if your routine calls for daily doses of healthy foods, exercise, and relaxation, which you can adjust to fit your lifestyle. A few suggestions include deep breathing, meditation, prayer, yoga, arts, crafts, music, dance, bio-feedback, self-hypnosis, muscle relaxation and mental imaging, which consists of mental exercises that create feelings of heaviness and warmth in the muscles.

If all else fails, write a "to do" list of things you've already done. You will feel terrific!

MELANOMAS PART I

Melanoma is defined as a tumor or growth which is made up of the melanin-pigmented cells. Melanin is a black or dark brown pigment which is found in the skin, hair and in the retina of the eye. Statistics show that in 1996, approximately 3800 people were diagnosed with malignant melanoma. It is further estimated that in a year as many as 7000 people could die from this kind of cancer.

Melanoma in the foot is not as common as in other parts of the body, but unfortunately it is a particularly aggressive form of this cancer. In fact, the mortality rate for melanoma occurring in the foot is much higher than with those in other parts of the body. The other factor is when melanoma is found in the foot, it could occur underneath the toenail where it is very difficult to see. Often it can be confused with bleeding under the nail or possibly other fluids that result from an ingrown nail. In some cases the melanoma occurs without presence of pigment which makes it even more difficult to detect. If you notice any moles on the skin of your feet or increase pigmentation under the toenails that you haven't noticed before it is important to have it checked out.

If you have noticed any of these changes, or have concerns regarding foot care contact us at 773-4300. We are located at 1261 Furnace Brook Parkway, Suite #18, Quincy, and are affiliated with Carney, Quincy and South Shore Hospitals.

SPRING CAR CARE

Trouble Free Summer Driving

Spring is the perfect time to help your car recover from the brutal winter and prepare it for the rigors of summer driving, according to Southern New England.

"After a long winter, most people are eager to get out and enjoy the warmer weather," said AAA Senior Vice President of Automotive Services Sherrie Ryan. "The time spent preparing your car can keep your spring and summer road trips from being interrupted by expensive and inconvenient breakdowns."

To prepare for warm-weather driving, AAA suggests motorists have their cars thoroughly inspected by a certified technician. At minimum, you or your technician should:

- Inspect anti-freeze/coolant level and condition, making certain the proper 50/50 mixture of water and coolant is present.
- Check motor oil and condition. If driving under extreme conditions -- such as very hot temperatures or towing a heavy trailer -- switch to a motor oil with higher viscosity. Check the owner's manual for specific oil recommendations.

- Inspect and replace worn or cracked belts as well as worn, cracked, blistered or soft hoses.
- Examine tires for uneven or excessive tread wear. Make sure all tires, including the spare, are inflated properly.

• Check the air conditioning system for leaks and have it serviced using the refrigerant R-12 in older systems or R-134A in new or modified air conditioners. Do not use non-approved substitute refrigerants.

• Hot weather can shorten the life of a car's battery, so weak or old batteries should be tested and replaced if necessary.

Communication Promotes Quality Auto Repair

Even if you don't know the difference between a fuel injector and an oxygen sensor, there are still things you can do to help your auto repair technician properly service your vehicle, according to AAA Southern New England.

"Consumers can help by accurately describing the problem and by asking questions until they understand the work being done on their car," said AAA Managing Director of Automotive Services Richard Del Nero. "Accurate communication between the repair shop and the customer is one of the most important contributors to trouble-free auto service."

The first step is to make an appointment for repairs whenever possible. If the shop management knows you are coming and has an idea of the problem, they can assign the right person to the job and allow enough time to get it done properly.

When you arrive at the shop, don't tell the service advisor what you think needs to be fixed or replaced unless it's obvious. Instead, describe the problem and its symptoms. Let the technician determine what needs to be fixed.

To avoid misunderstanding, always get an estimate in writing. Oral estimates can be disputed for forgotten. Most written estimates contain a clause allowing the actual cost to exceed the estimate by a certain percentage, such as 10 percent.

Carefully read the work order before you leave your vehicle at the shop. Be wary of broad statements such as "check and correct transmission noise" or "repair engine." You could wind up with a new transmission or engine and bill higher than you expected. Also, never sign a blank work order, and never tell the shop personnel to "do what's necessary" or "just fix it," unless the problem will clearly be covered under warranty.

Make sure you understand the shop's warranty. It should be printed on the bill. If not, ask for it in writing.

Finally, take a test drive. If the car isn't running right, don't take it home. If you discover that the problem is not solved after you leave the shop, make an appointment to bring the car back as soon as possible.

To further ensure quality auto repair, AAA recommends motorists take their vehicles to shops recognized by AAA's Approved Auto Repair program. These shops have met AAA's rigorous standards for technician competence and customer satisfaction. AAA-approved shops are also equipped with the sophisticated equipment needed to service today's high-tech vehicles.

COOLANT LEAKS AND WHITE SMOKE

While it is normal for wisps of on any system, including its coolant vapor to leave the tailpipe and quickly dissipate during morning engine start-ups, a thick and billowy stream of smoke is not. This condition is also caused by water, specifically engine coolant leaking into the combustion chamber. The coolant may either be gasket or a crack in the cylinder head or block. A compression test may isolate the problem cylinder and lead to a determination of the extent of the problem. This condition should be attended to quickly because it can rapidly lead to low levels of coolant and engine overheating. The coolant may also soak a spark plug, leading to rough idling, stumbling also be accompanied by milky driveability and reduced power.

Raiders Even

By CHARLES ROSS

After starting the season with two wins, the North Quincy High baseball team had a rough week as they dropped two in a row to even their season record at 2-2.

Last Thursday in Taunton, the Red Raiders got behind early and never caught up and wound up on aspect of the meet was a knee injury to top OCL discuss thrower Ellen Tang but throw coach Maureen Fallon is optimistic Tang will be back soon.

No relays were run as the meet was clinched well before the meet was over. North travels to Notre Dame Saturday for a freshmen-sophomore invitational and travels to Bridgewater-Raynham on Tuesday, April 27 and hosts Barnstable Thursday, April 29.

BASEBALL

the short end of a 21-2 score. Coach Larry Taglieri said, "Taunton came out hot and we just never got it going," said Raider Coach Larry Taglieri.

This loss came two days after North dropped its first of the year to Silver Lake by a 5-4 score. The Red Raiders led 4-0, but the Lakers came back with three runs in the 6th inning. They scored one in the 7th and with two outs and the game tied at 4-4 Taunton hit a home run to end the game and send North to its first defeat of the young season.

Matt McCann went five innings pitching one-hit ball against Taunton. Hitting stars were Chris Brogli with a two-run double and John Gavin with two hits.

Taglieri said the team is looking to move past the two losses and get back on the winning track. They played Milton on Tuesday in a non-league game and play at Braintree Friday morning.

"This is a young club and I'm sure as the season goes along we'll reach our full potential and begin peaking as we get closer to the tourney," Taglieri said.

Sheets Vows $6 Million To Clean Beach Water

was compared to Constitution Beach and Carson Beach in South Boston.

The rest of the message proposes a five-year plan, which will cost close to $6 million, to upgrade sewers and storm drains in the area to eliminate sources of pollution.

Implementing these recommendations would be "a small step toward a better Boston Harbor, but a colossal leap toward a renaissance at Wollaston Beach," said Douglas Gutro, president of the Ward 5 Community Association and a member of the task force.

"This investment in clean water, coupled with the MDC's upcoming landside improvements program, will make Wollaston Beach the best bet on Boston Harbor," said Gutro.

"I am extremely proud of the job done by the Wollaston Beach Task Force," said Sheets. "Their report goes a long way toward identifying what must be done to return Wollaston Beach to a major recreational area in the city."

Accompanying Sheets and Gutro were MWRA Executive Director Douglas MacDonald, Ward 5 Councillor Stephen Durkin and Joan LeBlanc, deputy director of the Boston Harbor Association.

Public Works Commissioner David Colton praised Durkin for asking the mayor to create the task force.

"This is a blueprint to bring clean water to Wollaston Beach," said Durkin, "and it is the job of all of us to carry out these recommendations."

The end of discharges from the MWRA's Nut Island outfall last July solves one aspect of the problem, said MacDonald, "and we are committed to working with the task force to eliminate other sources of pollution."

Others spoke to the need to pinpoint the sources of pollution which are contaminating not only the swimming waters but the shellfish beds along the shallow beach.

Wollaston Beach has provided a recreational area for residents of Quincy and beyond for 100 years and the area must be restored, they said.

The five-year, $6 million plan is ambitious:

- Investigate and identify sewer and storm drain problems and improper connections;
- Replace faulty sewer lines in the Sachem Street area;
- Improve MDC storm drains along Quincy Shore Drive;
- Eliminate improper connections;
- Clean outfalls on a regular basis and
- Repair additional storm drains and sewers.

Other costs, such as pushing ahead the construction of the MWRA's Quincy pump station and establishing a monitoring system along the force main which runs underground along Wollaston Beach, costs which would be borne by the MWRA, have not yet been determined.

A large component of restoring water quality will focus on public education, they added. The task force recommended increased enforcement of existing rules such as no dogs on the beach during the summer months and four-year-old pooper scooper bylaw. The task force recommended installing additional multimitt stations along the beach where pet waste could be deposited.

Declaring Quincy as a federally designated "no discharge zone" for boat waste would reduce bacteria as well. The task force recommended first establishing a recreational boating commission and expanding pumpout facilities, both public and private. In addition, the city will have a pumpout boat moored in Fore River which will accept boat waste by scheduled appointment Fridays through Sundays and holidays during the season.

Other pumpout locations can be obtained by calling 1-800-ASK-FISH.

The task force also recommends that the city, the MDC and the state determine all the sources of bacterial contamination in a separate study and evaluate the public health risks to the community. Further, the Department of Marine Fisheries could assess the health of the shellfish beds.

Even after problems related to sanitary sewage are resolved, storm drains emptying onto Wollaston Beach may continue to cause problems, the task force acknowledged. Long-term solutions such as removing the eight storm drains from the beach, extending the drains into Quincy Bay or treating stormwater could cost between $10 million and $30 million. A $150,000 study could determine the feasibility of that work, the task force stated.

What can be done immediately is to increase water sampling between Memorial Day through Labor Day, using new technology which can provide results more quickly. MDC officials Tuesday agreed to do that as well as to expand signage at the beach advising beachgoers about water quality conditions and broaden the public education programs and heighten awareness of pollution prevention. Such measures could include establishing a library resource center and distributing materials about water quality through the schools and colleges.

In turn, the Boston Harbor Association, in conjunction with the Wollaston Beach Task Force, will issue a report card on an annual basis and track efforts to implement the water quality improvement plan. Last year's report card gave Wollaston Beach an overall C for its water quality, with the area at Rice Road receiving a B+, Milton Road, C- and Channing Street and Sachem Street a D.

"To date, the MWRA and ratepayers from the Greater Boston area have spent over $3.5 billion to improve water quality in Boston Harbor. While this effort has brought marine life back to the harbor and made many other beaches swimmable, Wollaston Beach in Quincy is still polluted," said Joan LeBlanc, deputy director of the Boston Harbor Association.

"As advocates for the harbor, we won't be satisfied until water quality is restored to this significant urban coastal resource. Solving this complex environmental problem will require implementation of the task force's recommendation and continued financial support from local, state and federal agencies," said LeBlanc.

The task force, appointed by Sheets last April, was comprised of Durkin as chairman and 27 others, including Health Commissioner Jane Gallahue, Shellfish Warden Andrew Ayers and Cynthia DeCristofaro of the Department of Public Health; Public Works Commissioner David Colton, Daniel Sheahan of Weston and Sampson Engineers, engineering consultant Denise Conry, and several Quincy residents — Peter Forbes, Michael Hurley, former Councillor Leo Kelly, Robert Lescinskas and Alfred Wilson and former state Rep. Michael Bellotti.

Other task force members included Rich Kleiman of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, Mark Dolittle of the state Department of Environmental Protection, Bill Clark of the Massachusetts Bays Program, Katie Barrett of the Fore River Watershed Association, Michael Delaney and Andrea Rex of the MWRA and Sharon Raymond, formerly of the MWRA, Samantha Overton Bussell of the Metropolitan District Commission and Glen McAuliffe of the MDC's Wollaston Beach. Matt Liebman of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, John Walsh of the Nut Island Citizen Advisory Committee, John Stewart of the Quantum Yacht Club, Rev. John Swanson of Union Congregational Church.

SCOTT DEWARE

A Thought For The Week

"Whatever you do, you need courage. Whatever course you decide upon, there is always someone to tell you you are wrong. There are always difficulties arising which tempt you to believe that your critics are right. To map a course of action and follow it to an end, requires some of the same courage which a soldier needs. Peace has its victories, but it takes brave men to win them." - Ralph Waldo Emerson

Each of us, as we go through life, strives to be a winner in our own way. But it takes courage to be a winner, a winner at responding to life. It takes courage to accept friendship and intimacy with other people. It takes courage to take a stand in an unpopular cause. It takes courage to choose reality over approval. It takes courage to accept the responsibility for your own choices and dare to be yourself. New ways are often uncertain ways and as Robert Frost expressed it: 'Courage is the human virtue that counts most - courage to act on limited knowledge and insufficient evidence. That's all any of us have.'

The great thing about courage is that, when we get the hang of it, it becomes character. And character, after all is the reflex of our success as a human being...

tory and education as well, he continued.

"What the Adamases mean to Quincy and to Massachusetts is being rediscovered," Galvin said, "especially with all the recent publicity of C-SPAN, the 'Amistad' movie and the forthcoming biography of John Adams by David McCullough." President John Adams also was the author of the Massachusetts Constitution, the forerunner of the U.S. Constitution, Galvin noted.

C-SPAN presently is televising a 41-week series of "Presidential Portraits," highlighting each President for a week. This week the series is focusing on John Quincy Adams, and a two-hour-long interview about the sixth President will be rebroadcast at 8 p.m. tomorrow (Friday).

Councillor-at-large Paul Harold, who serves on the board of the Adams Temple and School Fund, said the publicity surrounding the church's need for monies has heightened the public's awareness of the church's short-term and long-term needs.

In the short-term, funds were needed to continue the tours, he said. The long-term needs require financial support to assist in the restoration, preservation and maintenance of the historic building, said Harold.

"We would be short-sighted" not to do everything possible not to allow the crypt to be open, said Galvin. "The Adamases are part of our civic family. Who would not take care of the graves of our relatives, even seven generations past?" he asked rhetorically. "This is what it's all about."

Galvin vowed to marshal all resources to find a permanent solution to the financial problems the church faces in keeping the building open to visitors and in

STANDING BESIDE THE TOMB OF President John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State William Galvin, center, Karl DeBisschop, left, chairman of the building and grounds committee of the church, and Councillor-at-large Paul Harold talk about the importance to have the crypts open to the public. maintaining the structure, including seeking a line item in the state budget or filing special legislation to offset the costs of preserving the historically and architecturally significant church.

He said he did not believe that using public funds to preserve the building interferes with the policy of separation of church and state. "It's not a constitutional problem. We preserve these structures because they are significant. To be eligible, they must be on the National or State Register of Historic Places, irrespective of religion."

"The reality is that this church, like many, are beautiful buildings and they define the streetscapes of a town or city and are irreplaceable," he said.

Within the past two-and-a-half years, Galvin noted, the state Historical Commission, through its Massachusetts Preservation Project Fund, has provided the First Parish Church with $235,000 in matching grants to finance the structural repairs of the original roof trusses and replace the slate roof, copper gutters and downspouts.

An appreciative Karl DeBisschop, the church's chairman of the building and grounds committee, said the grants have spurred the church's efforts in raising funds for the building's preservation.

Last February, Rev. Sheldon Bennett, minister of the United First Parish Church, said the church could no longer provide for the peripheral costs to open the crypt — the costs incurred for security, heat, electricity and maintenance — from its meager operating budget.

Bennett and other church officials calculated they would need $70,000 to open the church both this year and next year, but after further review, Bennett two weeks ago said the church would need a bare-bones sum of $15,000 to open the building. He estimated the $2 admission fee would provide an additional $5,000 to offset the related costs.

Galvin said Monday a formal contract needs to be executed but estimated the historic site could be open by May 1 seven days a week through Nov. 10.

The National Park Service will provide a ranger or trained volunteer to lead tourists through the crypt and view the tablets in the sanctuary which pay tribute to Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams.

Bennett noted that the church needs to do some minor capital improvements to accommodate the tourists, such as sprucing up the lobby of the church as well as the crypt.

However, he said the church would be open to group tours by advance reservation. A group tour could be arranged between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. Monday through Thursday by calling at least two or three days in advance.

The Adams National Historic Park opened for the season Monday. Its historic buildings include the Adams Birthplaces on Franklin Street, the Adams Mansion or Old House on Adams Street and the next door Stone Library, built by Charles Francis Adams to house his father's and grandfather's library. Tourists can stop at the National Park Service's visitor center at 1250 Hancock St. to board a trolley to transport them to the historic places.

Vernon has extensive experience working with small companies on Y2K compliance and related technical topics. Lacouture has been advising both private and public sector clients on Y2K issues, particularly in the areas of liability and insurance.

In addition, representatives from the electric power, banking, and telecommunications industries will take part in a panel discussion about their readiness for Y2K. A question-and-answer session at the conclusion of the conference will provide ample opportunity for additional information-gathering by participants.

This conference will be valuable to key members of small businesses, including owners and managers, information specialists, comptrollers, and purchasing agents, and to anyone facing Y2K technology issues.

The cost is $15 with payment in advance; or $20 at the door. Seating is limited. To register, call (508) 279-6145. Deadline is Monday, April 26. Directions to the Moakley Center are available on the college's web site, bridgew.edu.

All participants will receive a free CD ROM Y2K Project Tool that will help them apply information from the conference to their business.

TRIVIA ANSWERS

HOCUS-FOCUS

BY MATTINDELL

CRITIC'S CORNER

GO: 18-year-old Ronna (Sarah Polley), accompanied by reluctant partner-in-crime and fellow supermarket checkout clerk, Claire (Katie Holmes), is desperately looking to score some rent money before she's evicted. Simon (Desmond Askew), an impulsive Brit, is driving a stolen car with buddy, Marcus (Taye Diggs), during a wild night of partying on the Las Vegas strip. Adam (Scott Wolf) and Jack (Jay Mohr), a pair of TV stars, find themselves in the middle of a real-life drug sting — and a very creepy Christmas dinner.

FLOOR: Question reality. A man awakens to discover a bloody shirt in his house and his boss murdered the night before. Did he do it? Why can't he remember?

THE THIRTEENTH FLOOR is a sci-fi thriller that explores the ominous possibility of computer simulated universes, where people only believe they are real.

Douglas Hall (Craig Bierke) and his boss, Hannon Fuller (Armin Mueller-Stahl), have created 1937 Los Angeles on a computer chip. When Fuller is murdered, Hall immediately becomes the prime suspect and must enter through the 13th floor in search of the truth. A beautiful woman (Gretchen Mol) who suddenly appears on the scene may hold the key to the mystery.

Your Horoscope by Natasha

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You're unsure if the financial advice you've received is going to work for you. You are wise to question this. Do some more research before deciding what to do.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) The week turns out to be a mix of progress and setbacks. You end it on the same footing as you began. Couples come to terms this weekend over a monetary concern, which is finally out to rest.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Don't allow yourself the luxury of inaction on the job this week. Your skills are necessary to complete a difficult task. Try not to worry over things which you can't control.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Early in the week, you're already distracted by thoughts of the coming weekend and what you want to do. Try to exercise more discipline. Your concentration is needed.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You have a tendency this week to keep things to yourself. This will come in handy in business affairs. Instead of taking action, it's best to just sit back and observe.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You're out and about, shopping for fripperies. While this appeals to your aesthetic sense, it's not necessarily good for your budget. Tap into your more practical nature.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Someone comes to you with a dilemma you find difficult to unravel. However, between the two of you, the answer is soon found. Financial matters get a nice boost.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Others are waiting to hear from you, so pick up the phone. Someone to whom you've made a promise is still waiting patiently. Tend to this as soon as you can.

SAGITTARIUS
(November 22 to December 21) This is the time to put the accent on family life and domestic harmony. However, it's wise to leave this within the family unit itself. Having guests over this weekend only complicates matters.

CAPRICORN
(December 22 to January 19) It's not a good week to let things go at work, even though you're tempted to do so. Bigwigs are watching. The pursuit of pleasure is favored this weekend.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) You're really not concentrating, so it's probably best to stick close to home and tend to domestic chores. Even so, you're tempted to let distractions set in your way.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) It's not a good time to mince words with anyone. Speak up for yourself and say what's on your mind. Any projects you do in conjunction with others are favored.

YOU BORN THIS WEEK tend to depend more on yourself than on others. You are the proverbial "lone wolf," which sometimes puts people off. However, in romance, the opposite sex finds this extremely attractive and you have many love interests. Once you settle down, however, you are true to your relationship and your family. You succeed at any business you embrace, provided that you are self-employed.

"There has been a lot of work done by the mayor," he continued. "I've been involved as chairman of the hospital committee, and there is a task force that meets regularly on the issue."

He estimated during the past 14 months that he has attended 41 meetings dealing with the hospital's future, meeting with the task force, the mayor and administration and various groups interested in the affiliation.

"We've done a lot of work, but there's more work to do," he said.

Financial considerations have always been at the front burner, Sheets continued. "You have $57 million bonded indebtedness" for the expansion of the hospital, "and there are unfunded pension liabilities.

"We want to negotiate the best possible deal for the city," he said.

In addition, he wants to see Quincy remain as a full-service hospital.

"One of the goals from the outset was to retain Quincy Hospital with a continuation of community service," said Sheets.

While he would not say which entity he prefers, he acknowledged that Quincy Hospital has had a good meaningful relationship with Boston Medical Center through its emergency contract, which has been in effect since July 1997.

In addition, Quincy Hospital has a special relationship with Boston Medical for use of its cardiac catheterization lab, said hospital spokesperson Renee Buisson.

Another aspect which appeals to Sheets is the fact that Boston Medical has a "health-net" program which provides insurance for the uninsured.

Councillor-at-large Paul Harold, who also serves on the council's hospital committee, said the city wants to be sure that Quincy remains as a full-service hospital and did not know whether an appropriation would be needed "to sweeten" the deal.

"Quincy is an attractive market," he noted.

Last January, Harold called for a public hearing before any contract is signed. He added that hospital staff want assurances that successor language in the to-be-executed documents would preserve their jobs.

Assures Parents After Colorado Tragedy Creedon: 'Our Schools Vigilant'

MAYOR JAMES SHEETS reads the book "The Spider's Tea Party" to youngsters at the Greater Quincy Childcare Center during the city's observance of the "Week of the Young Child."

(Quincy Sun Photo/Tom Gorman)

By MARILYN JACKSON

When students returned to school this week from their spring vacation, the tragic events at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colorado, were on their mind.

Overwhelmingly, said School Superintendent Eugene Creedon, "there is tremendous disbelief that such a thing could happen, that something like this would happen in a school."

Generally, the teachers systemwide were encouraged to allow youngsters to express their concerns, their anxieties, their disbelief, he continued.

Some voiced fear that a similar incident could occur in their school and wondered what would happen, he said.

"Especially among the younger children, whose classes are on the first floor, they know their door is locked and people can't come in but wondered what if someone looks in a window or has a weapon. They asked, 'How do you prevent that?'"

"That's a real question," Creedon continued. "Many of the first floor classrooms have windows close to the ground. There is no armed fence around the school-house that keeps people 30 feet from the school."

He said the students were assured that there are security measures in place in their schools. "We don't allow bulky jackets, long trench coats... for security purposes and for appropriate decorum."

He said some parents had objected when their off-spring were told to take off their jackets and hang them in a locker, especially if they had had a jacket stolen, he said.

Yesterday, Creedon sent home a letter to the parents and guardians of all the students to assure them the

Teachers Reject Contract

By MARILYN JACKSON

The 760-member Quincy Education Association late Tuesday overwhelmingly rejected the city's contract offer in a vote that didn't even secure majority approval.

Following a heated, impassioned and sometimes angry debate, not even half of the more than 600 members voiced approval of the tentative agreement reached two weeks ago by the bargaining team. A two-thirds vote of those present was necessary to ratify the proposal.

The teachers perceived the financial package reflected little respect for their work, said QEA President Paul Phillips.

Two weeks ago, the city and the teachers' union had reached a tentative agreement which provided for a retroactive lump sum for this school year, which is nearly over, and a three-year contract which would begin next September.

Neither the mayor nor the QEA president would comment on the specifics of the contract proposal.

Mayor James Sheets, who was optimistic two weeks ago that the teachers would ratify an agreement which took 14 months to hammer out, was obviously disappointed. The teachers have been working without a contract since Sept. 1.

"There has to be a return to the bargaining table,"

Sheets said, adding he had not thought about whether the teachers would reject the proposal.

Phillips said a general membership meeting will be held next week to determine what will be the next steps.

"We want to continue negotiating," he said. "We may have different bargaining people."

He said at next week's meeting, the negotiating committee will present other suggestions and ask for approval or open the floor for other ideas.

"Right now, I'm not sure how we are going to go," said Phillips, following the two-hour debate and vote at the Sterling Middle School.

Neither the mayor nor

Phillips would comment on the financial details of the proposed compact. Phillips said although the teachers wanted better retirement benefits, similar to those offered to police officers, no improved retirement benefits were included in the new contract. However, an increase in the teachers' longevity stipend was proposed.

About a third of the teachers are expected to retire within the next 10 years, Phillips noted.

"Depending on each person's situation, it was mostly the financial package," said Phillips. "They needed more [of a] raise."

Can't It Be Separated From Church? Adams Crypt Will Open Saturday As Deed Studied

By MARILYN JACKSON church and state regarding Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams and their wives, the Church of the Presidents once again will reopen Saturday to tourists.

The crypt will be open to tourists starting Saturday and remain open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. through the season, according to the Rev. Sheldon Bennett, minister of the church. The season ends on Veterans' Day.

Last week, Secretary of State William Galvin announced the Massachusetts Historical Commission would provide a $15,000 emergency grant to the United First Parish Church, Unitarian, so that the burial place of the nation's second and sixth Presidents and their wives could be open.

The crypt, enclosed beneath the portico of the church, actually belongs to the Adams Temple and School Fund, not the church itself. The church takes care of the heat, electricity, maintenance and security of the area, while the National Park Service provides a range or trained volunteer to guide visitors to the crypt.

"We're very grateful and pleased that the Secretary of State was able to provide this funding so that the church can be open," said Bennett. "Still, the long-term problem needs to be solved; otherwise, it will be the same problem for the visitor program."

Bennett said the church, as well as the National Park Service and the Adams Temple and School Fund officials, needs to do more research and understand the terms of the deed which spells out the ownership of the crypt and delineates the church's authority over it.

In the past, the National Park Service has declined to help finance the costs of opening the building to the public, although it has provided tour guides for the past several years, claiming that the federal agency must abide by the concept of separation of church and state.

Last week, however, Secretary Galvin said providing emergency funds to open the crypt to the public was not a matter of church and state, just as the state's granting $235,000 in matching grants to repair, restore and preserve the church did not interfere with that doctrine.

"It's not a constitutional problem," said Galvin. "We preserve these structures because they are significant. To be eligible, they must be on the National or State Register of Historic Places, irrespective of religion."

Councillor-at-large Paul Harold, who serves as a supervisor of the Adams Temple and School Fund, said until recently, no one had seen the 1826 deed which the town of Quincy and the Congregational Society of Quincy, by which the church was known then, had transferred the 14-foot by 14-foot area beneath the portico to President John Quincy Adams for his parents' final resting place.

At the time, the "Stone Temple" was under construction, noted Harold.

A subsequent deed which expanded the size of the crypt to accommodate the tombs of President John Quincy Adams and his wife Louisa Catherine Johnson Adams probably was executed as well but has not yet been located, Harold said.

"I looked at the deed a long time ago, the language of John Quincy Adams," said City Council President Peter Kolson, "and in my estimation — but I'm not a constitutional scholar — the language is fairly clear that the crypt is not part of the church."

"The interment is not in the church, it is under the front steps, not under the sanctuary where the area is considered an ordained area," Kolson said.

"Through the years, it always was open. Now, all of a sudden, there is no money [for the church] to open the crypt."

"Technically, it was separated in the beginning. It is physically separate, and that eliminates the separation of church and state issue and qualifies it for federal funds," said Kolson, suggesting that perhaps the area may need to be "redeeded."

"The short-term remedy is well founded, and I applaud the efforts, but we cannot leave this" unresolved, said Kolson. "Much has been written about John Adams and John Quincy Adams and the First Ladies; they are more and more [appreciated as] part of the legacy of our past and the rich future of our country, and people draw strength from them."

"To have this site closed to the public is a little ridiculous," he said. It was meant to be open to the public, he continued. A Presidential wreath is placed there twice a year on the birthday of the Presidents, and the tombs are draped with an American flag.

Handicapped access to the crypts may be an issue, he acknowledged. A wheel-

Tuition Hike Proposed At Quincy College

By MARILYN JACKSON

When the Board of Governors of Quincy College meets Friday, Dr. Jeremiah Ryan, college president, will propose a tuition hike of between 5 and 7 percent.

"I expect it will be a significant debate," said Ryan. "We will consider the economy, what students can afford, where [at what income level] the Pell Grant is pegged, so that the neediest students won't be excluded."

Presently, tuition is $93 per credit hour or $1,116 for 12 credit hours. In comparison, Massasoit Community College, Roxbury Community College and Cape Cod Community College charge less per credit hour. UMass/Boston also charges a lower per-credit-hour tuition, but assesses a sizable fee based on the number of credits a student carries which pushes up the cost per semester to $2,096 for 12 credits.

Ryan first presented the $10.1 million budget for fiscal year 2000 to the board April 1, reducing operating expenses from $9.2 million to $9.0 million, he said.

"We took a long, hard look at reducing operating expenses and the number of staff at the institution," said Ryan. There is a net reduction of personnel of 3.5, of which 2.5 represents teaching staff.

In addition, the office technology or secretarial science program as well as the environmental science program will no longer be offered, said Ryan.

He said he was surprised that the environmental science program did not generate sufficient enrollment. As for the office technology program, he said students were more interested in computer technology or business management.

"The computer program is growing like wildfire and has surpassed the criminal justice program," he said.

What the board must decide is whether to invest in a seventh computer laboratory at Coddington Hall. Six are reserved for degree candidates and one for the corporate training program; another computer lab is housed at the Plymouth campus.

Ryan also has proposed using $75,000 to refurbish space on the ground level at Coddington Hall for a student lounge.

Her also has proposed an aggressive marketing strategy of the college, including radio advertisements and posters on the MBTA trains. In addition, the school sends a direct mail piece to every household in Boston, Cambridge, Chelsea and Somerville to publicize the school offerings.

Presently, he said, as many students from Boston attend Quincy College as those from Quincy. Each represent 20 percent of the school population.

In addition, 10 percent are international students, representing 66 countries from five continents. "We're blessed with being in the Boston metropolitan area, but we are less expensive than other surrounding schools."

This year was the first year that Quincy College began offering courses on the Internet although it has been providing courses via TV for the past seven years. "We plan to offer more [on the Internet] in the fall.

"We are dipping our toe in the water, but we want to be as competitive as possible," he said.

WEEK OF THE Young Child was recently kicked off at Snug Harbor School with 120 preschoolers from several public and private pre-schools attending festivities including storytelling by Mayor James Sheets and School Supt. Board Pulls Curtain On Bikini Contest

The License Board Tuesday voted unanimously to "cease and desist" an advertising campaign at Shooters on Hancock Street, presented by Kahlua.

Police Chief Thomas Frane, told the board that Shooters has been having a contest featuring ladies in bikinis and advertising "9 weeks of the most incredible bodies on the South Shore" in their ads.

According to Det. Lt. Robert M. Perchard, liquor inspector, and license board agent, the contest has 'ben ongoing weekly with $100 prizes. He said the finals were scheduled for June 10 with a grand prize of $1,000.

Frane said the contest is a violation because Shooters does not have a cabaret license needed for any kind of entertainment.

Recycling Bins Distribution At Central, NQHS

The Quincy Recycling Commission will sponsor a recycling bin distribution day Saturday, May 1 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in front of North Quincy High School and Central Middle School, both located on Hancock St.

Quincy residents will be able to pick up a blue recycling bin for the city's Blue Bin Instant Win Recycling Sweepstakes program.

In cooperation with the State Department of Environmental Protection, the City of Quincy has introduced a Blue Bin Instant Win program which began April 26. The program financially awards residents for recycling through the curbside program which runs now through June 16.

During the "sweepstakes," residents are eligible to win a cash prize for recycling. Each day for eight weeks, one resident will be randomly selected (by an independent auditing company) to win $100 for having the program-entry sticker affixed to their recycling bin containing appropriate recyclables.

Five additional residents, in proximity to the daily $100 prizewinner, will also be selected to be entered in the grand prize drawing for $1,000.

Residents should have received a sticker and program rules in the mail recently. For more information, call 770-BINS.

Uncle Sam: A Blindfold And Cause

Uncle Sam is going to put the blindfold on again--to help people see.

Rounseville will run blindfolded in the second annual Quincy Lions Club 5-kilometer (3.2 mile) road race set for June 6.

He did it last year and helped raise a hefty share of the near $20,000 realized by that first race to help support eye research and provide eye care to those in need.

Rounseville, who has had some fun since the day he went into court in 1991 to legally change his name from Leroy to Uncle Sam, is dead serious about the blindfold.

"It zeroes in on the fact that there are many people who are blind or afflicted with poor sight," he says. "And, that the Quincy Lions Club and all participating in the road race are trying to make things better for them, and, perhaps, save others from these same problems in the future."

Uncle Sam has a close relationship with blindness.

His mother, Elda Rounseville of Quincy, for many years gave free music lessons on the banjo and piano to blind persons. Now, at age 92, she is blind herself.

His father, the late Roy Rounseville, a popular Quincy florist fondly known as "Uncle Roy," was a long-time active member of the Quincy Lions Club and a spearhead in its eye-research fundraising.

He also gave generously of his time as a volunteer, driving blind or near-blind persons to doctor appointments, stores, church and running errands for them.

So, in a way, Uncle Sam is following in their footsteps when he makes eye research and eye care his cause.

He's also serious about being Uncle Sam and sees himself in the role of "America's cheerleader."

He has campaigned in 48 states urging people to register to vote and mingled with George and Barbara Bush and Bill and Hillary Clinton.

He even appeared in a campaign documentary with Clinton and got to the latter's first inaugural where, he says, "I worked my way up front singing patriotic songs."

He has also been on the floor at both the Democratic and Republican National Conventions and front-row at the Winter and Summer Olympics in France and Spain.

Always appropriately attired in patriotic red, white and blue--tails, vest, striped pants and high hat.

And that's how he was dressed on Valentine's Day, 1996 when he telephoned Jean Kenney, whom he had been dating, and asked her to meet him at the busy corner of Beale St. and Newport Ave., Wollaston.

When she arrived, he dropped down on one knee and proposed to her as passing pedestrians smiled and motorists tooted their horns in approval. And, she accepted.

A romantic, Rounseville that same year got his friend, then Governor William Weld to perform the wedding ceremony--at the Hatch Shell in Boston.

"It was a real big wedding," muses Rounseville. "There were thousands in attendance. And we had Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops Orchestra play."

'Drive Alive 55' Refresher Course For Seniors

The Quincy Department of Elder Services and AARP are co-sponsoring "Drive Alive 55," a classroom refresher course for drivers 50 and older.

The course will be held Monday, May 3 and Wednesday, May 5 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Squantum Gardens Community Center. Cost is $8.

Call Mary Burke at 376-1243 to reserve a place in the class.

ing."

It happened to be July 3, the night before the orchestra's final rehearsal for the July 4th annual concert. The rehearsal draws a huge crowd, too. Rounseville then got Weld to let him and Jean have their reception in the State House.

Being Uncle Sam, says Rounseville, has its ups and downs. One of the ups, of course, was proposing to Jean and having her accept. And meeting celebrities and just ordinary folks who want to have their picture taken with him is another.

One of the downs was the home opener for the Red Sox a few years ago. Before they threw out the first ball, they threw Uncle Sam out -- right out of Fenway Park.

"The game hadn't even started," Rounseville says. "I was standing down behind the batting cage watching batting practice. Security came up to me and said I couldn't wear 'that' uniform in Fenway Park. And that my hat was blocking people's view."

Before he could explain he takes his hat off when he sits down so he doesn't block someone's view, he was ushered out of the park.

"I paid to get in," he says. "They didn't even give me a refund."

The Red Sox took a public relations bath when evicting Uncle Sam hit the newspapers, radio and television.

But another up, he thinks, will be this year's Lions Club road race.

"Hopefully, we can raise $25,000 this year," he says. "A lot of people are going to try to make that happen."

Among them is Club President Steve Mansfield who was last year's race director and Tom Zukauskas of Cerebral Palsy, this year's director: Rounseville's wife, Jean, Lions Club immediate past president in whose term the first race was held; Mayor James Sheets as honorary chairman. And, of course, the runners, walkers and sponsors.

The 5-kilometer race for adults starts at 11 a.m. and the 1-kilometer for children at 10:30 a.m. Both start and finish at Pageant Field off Southern Artery.

For more information on registration you can call Zukauskas at 617-479-7443.

Uncle Sam completed the race last year blindfolded but stumbled and fell at the finish.

"It really drove home the point," says Rounseville, "of how difficult it is for a blind person or someone with poor sight to get around."

Scenes From Yesterday

FOR MANY YEARS The White Brothers Milk Company operated a large fleet of milk trucks from their bottling plant on French Street in Norfolk Downs. The site of that plant is now the Quincy Commons apartment complex. They also had a large garage for truck storage and maintenance now occupied by the A.F. Murphy Machine Co. on Hancock Street. The smaller trucks delivered "that Creamy milk," which was not homogenized, to homes and stores well beyond the greater Quincy area. The large tank trucks transported fresh milk from dairy farms in Vermont and other areas of northern New England to the plant in Quincy. This old picture shows one of those tank trucks apparently the victim of a slippery mountain road. The date and location of this picture are unknown. Perhaps someone remembers. This is one of four views of the accident scene.

Murder And Cowards

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

In watching the memorial services for Rachel Scott, a student at Columbine High School, Littleton, Colorado, who was murdered on April 20, 1999, by two cowards, Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold, both students from the same school, who were planning this carnage for about one year to honor Hitler's birthday, I had the following thoughts.

Most people do not know that Hitler committed suicide on April 30, 1945. Ironic, isn't it? All cowards, to say the least.

I pray for the other 12 students and one popular teacher who were also killed and for the other students in the hospitals recovering. The parents of the two murderers should look deep inside their souls and ask themselves whether they could have prevented this tragedy.

As a former commando, who served under General George Patton, I was present in the Ohrdruf concentration camp in Eastern Germany, which was liberated by the 4th Armored Division, when the General, upon entering the camp, vomited and then yelled that the place to kill people was on the battlefield.

Hancock Park, My Home Away From Home

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

One day as I lay in my hospital bed, I was informed by my physician, Dr. Soodan, that I would have to go to a nursing home until my strength returned. After the doctor left my room, I had thoughts flashing through my mind of the horrors I had heard about nursing homes all my life. I couldn't believe my life had come to this. I was always a hard worker and could not fathom my being placed in a nursing home. Dr. Soodan, seeing my uncertainty, suggested that I should take a look at Hancock Park. After my niece toured the facility, she was very impressed and agreed that it would be the best place for me. Reluctantly I consented.

When I arrived at Hancock Park I was greeted by a very caring and friendly staff. I immediately realized that my aversion to nursing homes no way applied to Hancock Park.

I have enjoyed so many things here at Hancock Park. Maryanne Smith, the Activities Coordinator for the 5th floor where I have been since my arrival a little over a year ago, is always planning activities which I always enjoy.

Some of my favorite activities have been going out to lunch, the Quincy Christmas Parade, the Boston Harbor Cruise, malls and many other events. This would not be possible without the help of the dedicated staff. Some even come in on their days off to help out, knowing that without enough chaperones, it would be impossible for us to attend a lot of events.

One occasion that comes immediately to mind, that I will never forget is when I became close friends with my roommate. One day she became very ill and was rushed to the hospital. After a few months, she returned to Hancock Park, but unfortunately had to go to a different room. Tammy Goodhue, a wonderful nursing assistant, came to my room and said, "Come on Dot, let's go have lunch with Anne (my old roommate)." This happened for three more days until she was rushed to the hospital once more. A few days later Tammy and Teresa Lyons (another wonderful nursing assistant) came to tell me that Anne had passed away. I was very upset by the news, but they took the time to sit with me and share my grief.

When the time came for me to make a decision about returning to my own home, alone, or staying at Hancock Park with all the loving care and kindness that I always receive from staff, it was not difficult to choose to stay here.

In closing, I would like to emphasize, without a doubt that I would recommend Hancock Park to anyone having to decide for themselves, or their loved ones regarding placement in a nursing home.

Trying To Find A 'Quincy, Massachusetts' T-Shirt

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

Recently my family was a host family for an exchange student from Valence, France.

I wanted to give her a gift to remind her of her stay in Quincy, Massachusetts. I wanted to get her a T-shirt or a tote bag that said Quincy, Massachusetts, on it. Isn't this a good way to promote our city?

Well, I scanned many stores in Quincy, also the Historical Society and the National Park Service. No one sells them. Yes, you can find some T-shirts in the summer, but do tourists just come here in the good weather? People come here all year round. Would it be possible to have some store or City Hall sell them to promote our city?

Trolley Service Ends This Week

By PAUL HAROLD

After 60 years of operation, trolley service in Quincy ended this week with the last run from Quincy Square to Boston at 10:02 p.m. on Monday.

April 29 - May 5

51 Years Ago

The trolleys are being replaced by buses, with the first bus run out of the square at 5:45 a.m. on Tuesday. Eastern Mass. Street Railway Company was granted a permit to operate the replacement service at the 11th hour.

Service from the square to Fields Corner, where riders could board the MTA, was express, with no stops along Hancock St. or in Dorchester. The fare remained the same as the trolley fare at 10 cents.

Meanwhile, city public works officials were making demands for the trolley tracks to be torn up along Hancock and Sea Streets.

NEW ROADS TO PARKING AREA PLANNED

The City Council considered plans for new roadways that would connect the Hancock parking area with the Southern Artery to the east and Hancock St. to the west. Presented by Councillor Frank Orcutt with the endorsement of Mayor Charles Ross, the plans called for the widening of Canal and Wibird Streets with an extension of Revere Rd. into the parking area.

City Engineer Charles Herbert estimated the cost at $375,000. He said a few houses would have to be moved back or taken, with three stories slated for taking to provide the access to Hancock St.

GILKERSON 'DECLARES WAR' ON CURLEY

Quincy state Representative Avery Gilkerson "declared war" on Boston Mayor James Curley from the floor of the House of Representatives, in an attempt to get Boston to end its pollution of Boston Harbor and Quincy Bay.

The sewerage treatment plant for the South Metropolitan District was under construction at Nut Island, but despite past promises, Boston had no plans to end its discharge of raw sewerage from Moon Island.

"If Mayor Curley doesn't do anything, I will insist that Mayor Ross asks to obtain an injunction (to end the discharge of sewerage in Quincy Bay)," Gilkerson said.

Snug Harbor Talent Show Winners Step Out In Style

Ten talented students from the Snug Harbor Community Elementary School recently stepped out in style. The third, fourth and fifth grade students were finalists in the first annual Snug Harbor talent show sponsored by members of the Snug Harbor Student Council.

After school one day, students performed for parents, teachers and classmates. With acts ranging from song and dance to comedy and ventriloquism, a large array of talent was displayed.

The variety of talent only made the decision of the judges that much more difficult. However, Nicole Moore, Christina Bock, Gina Spada, Abby Perez, Nola Ellife, Victoria Volpini, Lauren Clark, Melody Sanchez, Axel Chapin and Olivia Lynn captivated the audience and walked away with the prize . . . or more precisely, drove away in the prize.

The 10 students stepped out of Snug Harbor, walked past photographers, and stepped into an awaiting limousine. Sporting shades creating an incognito effect, these "stars of the day" enjoyed a ride around the city and a great meal at Pizza Hut on Washington St., Quincy.

Students are already planning their acts for next year's show. Special thanks goes out to Starlight Limousine Services of Quincy for donating the limousine.

MELANOMAS PART II

In the last article we defined a melanoma as a tumor or growth primarily in the skin. The tumor contains melanin pigmented cells and looks like a mole. Since moles are common. A person should be concerned with moles that seem "different." The features to look for include: irregular borders around the mole; changes in color where the pigmentation is not uniform. E.G. shades of brown mixed in with black or even red, bleeding within the mole, sudden enlargement, open sores slow to heal or non-healing and itching. Any of the above features in a mole can be a warning sign and should be examined by a qualified health professional. The earlier a melanoma is detected, the better the outcome for the patient.

If you are experiencing any of these symptoms or other foot problems, call to make an appointment at our office at 773-4300. We are located at 1261 Furnace Brook Parkway, Suite #18, Quincy, and are affiliated with Carney, Quincy and South Shore Hospitals.

Quincy Court Law Day Awards Ceremony May 4

The annual Quincy District Court Law Day ceremonies will begin at 9 a.m. Tuesday, May 4, at the Chestnut Street courthouse.

Among those scheduled to be honored are Rabbi Jacob Mann of Beth Israel Synagogue, Clerk Magistrate Arthur Tobin and three members of the Quincy Police Department.

Keynote speaker of the event will be Federal District Court Chief Judge William G. Young.

Rabbi Mann, who has served his community for 57 years, will receive the Jason Feldman Outstanding Citizen Award. The award, which honors outstanding citizenship, will be presented by Judge Charles Black, presiding justice of Quincy District Court.

Father Bill's Place will receive the Quincy District Court's Outstanding Program Award, which also will be presented by Judge Black. Father Bill also will be honored.

Father Bill's Place first opened in 1988 at its own site on Broad Street to assist the homeless in Quincy and on the South Shore.

Six members of the law enforcement community will receive the Robert P. Dana Distinguished Service Award. They are Detective David Schofield, Officer Gregory Goyette and Officer Michael O'Shea of the Quincy Police Department; Lt. Russell Jenkins and Officer Brian Kelley of the Braintree Police Department, and Sgt. Joseph Comperchio of the Weymouth Police Department.

District Attorney William Keating will present these awards as well as the Timothy J. Spillane Outstanding District Court Prosecutor Award.

Quincy Officers Goyette and O'Shea are being commended for bravery and heroism exhibited when they saved the lives of a mother and son who were trapped on the second floor of their smoke-filled home on Hamilton Avenue last February.

Last February they responded to an E-911 call that flames and smoke were visible; when they arrived, they forced entry into the house and assisted the trapped mother and son to safety.

Quincy Police Chief

Thomas Frane also nominated Detective Schofield for the Dana Award for his persistent determination, dedication, motivation and professionalism in the murder investigation of Katherine Romano who was last seen Sept. 29.

Schofield uncovered a vital piece of evidence which turned the investigation around and made it possible for the district attorney to seek and obtain a murder indictment against her husband earlier this month.

A host of other awards will be bestowed during Monday's ceremonies.

Dr. William Frates of Hingham, a retired Quincy Hospital radiologist, will receive the James R. McIntyre Award. This award, which is named in honor of the late Quincy mayor and state senator, recognizes outstanding service to the law enforcement profession. It will be presented by his son, Attorney Charles McIntyre.

Tobin, who also served as a Quincy mayor from 1978 to 1981, will receive the Alfred P. Malaney Award as the Quincy Bar Association's Man of the Year. Attorney Paul Barbadoro, president of the Quincy Bar Association, will present the award.

The Mark S. Charbonnier Award will be presented to Sgt. Gerard R. Mattaliano, a State Trooper for more than 16 years who presently is assigned to District Attorney Keating's office. This award is named in memory of State Trooper Charbonnier, badge number was 953, who was slain in Kingston in 1994. The award will be presented by his friend, Trooper Kenneth Halloran.

Mayor James Sheets will bring greetings from the city.

The invocation will be offered by the Rev. William McCarthy of St. John the Baptist Church, and the benediction will be said by Rabbi Mann.

The Bar Association of Norfolk County will hold its Law Day ceremonies May 3 at Norfolk Superior Court in Dedham. The featured speaker will be Judge Julian T. Houston, regional administrative justice of Norfolk Superior Court, whose talk will focus on "Celebrate Your Freedom."

His daughter, Elisabeth Houston, will lead the Pledge of Allegiance, and Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti will read the Law Day Proclamation.

Rita McCarthy, chief probation of the Dedham District Court, will receive the Amicus Curiae Award, while Attorney Francis Doucette will be given the Pro Bono Award.

The annual Law Day dinner will be held at the Neighborhood Club of Quincy May 12, at which Attorney General Thomas Reilly will speak. For further information, call Adrienne Clarke at (617) 471-9693.

Creedon: 'Our Schools Vigilant'

school is vigilant about protecting students as well as educating them.

"From the school system's perspective, we take school safety very seriously," he wrote. "Each school has the responsibility for developing a security plan, and all schools are equipped with a video camera at the front entrance.

"Generally doors are locked, teachers and others monitor the hallways, and, most importantly of all, we know our students.

"We have consistently treated student issues very seriously, notifying parents, evaluating students by the school's mental health professionals as well as by outside agencies," he wrote.

"In no way do we hold ourselves as a model," Creedon said, "but schools in New England, in Massachusetts, are more aware of the need for a sense of security, particularly in urban schools where we have in-house security."

He said there are three security officers at Quincy High School and two at North Quincy High who patrol the school. If a youngster is out in the corridor, the officer brings it to the attention of the principal or assistant principal, said Creedon.

"If the officers become aware of the need to search a locker or bookbag, if they have a reason to believe there are weapons or drugs present, we search," he said.

In addition to the security officers at the secondary schools, there are two DARE (Drug and Alcohol Resistance Education) officers who teach in the elementary and middle schools, and a uniformed safety officer at the elementary school, plus a community resource officer, he said.

The security officers do not carry guns, but the police officers in uniform do, he said.

He said none of the schools has metal detectors. "There was a serious debate about that seven years ago, when a couple of boys brought a pistol to Quincy High School.

"The gun wasn't loaded or even operable, but it caused great concern for us. The students were expelled, and it was the first time in the Commonwealth that a student under the age of 16 was expelled.

"The Department of Education took the city to court, arguing that the school had violated the law that children must be educated," Creedon related.

"The state Supreme Judicial Court found in favor of Quincy, and the state Education Reform Bill, enacted a year later, went further. A youngster can be expelled if he brings a weapon into the school, possesses drugs or assaults a staff member," he said.

Since then, only three students have been expelled permanently, one for bringing a weapon, a knife, not a gun, to school, Creedon said.

In his letter, Creedon wrote: "Like all of you, we are struck by the use of weapons and violence among some very troubled youth. This fact calls each of us to reevaluate the ways in which we allow violence into our homes and our lives, e.g., TV, video games, music and the Internet.

"I would like to stress the importance of parent involvement and open dialogue with your children and teenagers. Please make an effort to know what your children are watching, how they are spending their time and with whom. We encourage you to discuss these troubling events at home as we are helping your child deal with their concerns and questions at school."

The letter also explains the school policy of holding monthly round table meetings among the school's mental health professionals to discuss pertinent school issues and student needs and initiate appropriate intervention.

Led by Kenneth McPhee, safety coordinator for the schools, the group includes members of the police department, the court, school administrators, principals, guidance counselors, school psychologists, representatives from the Department of Social Services and the district attorney's office. And, Creedon emphasized, the parents are all involved.

At the conclusion of the letter, Creedon urged parents to contact a teacher, principal, school psychologist or counselor if they have specific concerns. "We will continue to focus on providing the highest quality of education for your child in a safe and respectful environment," he wrote, "and please keep in mind that we need and welcome your help."

Restaurant Expansion Rejected By Board

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

The owners of The Inn At Bay Pointe, 64 Washington Court, were denied their request to add an additional 3,840 square feet of space to the existing restaurant.

Another meeting will be held with the abutters and City Engineer Jack Gillan.

Speaking at Tuesday's License Board meeting, Atty. Robert Fleming said the expansion does not add to the original plan, but entails enclosing an existing side deck.

The expansion would increase the seating capacity from 160 seats to 244 seats.

Ward 2 Councillor Dan Raymondi, speaking in opposition, accused the owner Damien Pettinelli of first requesting the site for a "small family restaurant" of 125 seats, then increasing the seating capacity to 150 then to 160.

He told the board that the owners had "artfully and skillfully utilized the system by going from A to B."

He said that Washington Court "cannot handle the amount of traffic that would be generated with the expansion."

He asked the board to "reject or deny" any expansion to the restaurant.

Raymondi presented the board with a petition containing 180 names opposing the expansion.

Abutters cited traffic on Washington Court, being a narrow road, and odor problems and feared that the expansion would incur more of the same.

Fleming, who said he had "great respect" for Raymondi called his accusation of "misrepresentation" as "unfair" and said at all times, the owners said right from the onset, what their plans were and abided by everything that was required of them, and lived up to all their promises.

He said the area is an "industrial zone" and that since the opening of the establishment almost a year ago, there had been "no complaints".

He accused Raymondi of "putting fear in the people" about a second floor which he said would be used strictly as an office and dry storage space.

Pettinelli, who said he

"disagreed" with Raymondi's assessment, explained that the same roof line was being used, with no construction other than the floor plan which now exists.

Police Chief Thomas Frane made a motion to hold a second hearing notifying all of the abutters and City Engineer Jack Gillan in hopes he said of having a "compromise" with the neighbors and the owners.

Frane said he felt "uncomfortable" to vote until the traffic issues were addressed.

In response to an abutter who said toxic odors from the Marine Warehouse were so strong, she was "physically ill" was told by Fire Chief Thomas Gorman, that a paint used at the bottom of boats had been changed, so that the odors would not be as strong.

LEG LENGTH DISPARITY

Short leg syndrome refers to an array of foot, leg, knee and even low back pains caused by one leg being shorter than the other.

People are right and left legged just as they are right or left handed; usually, the dominant leg is the longer one. Frequently, the shortening is not in the thigh or shinbones, but in the area below the ankle, caused by a weakness in the foot. Once the podiatrist diagnoses this condition, he or she can correct the discrepancy with the use of heel lifts, arch supports or other orthotic devices. These corrective measures most often provide relief for the long-standing aches and pains this syndrome leg.

P.S. Curiously, the symptoms are usually more pronounced in the longer rather than the shorter leg.

Mowing Your Way To A Great Lawn

(NAPS)—There's nothing like the smell of fresh mown grass to tell you that spring is here and summer is on the way. But will you be ready for the mowing season?

One of the keys to a great summer lawn is mowing, says Billy Lowe of Snapper. A sharp mower blade and trimming to the right length for your yard can do more for your yard than pounds of fertilizer and an in-ground watering system. While the second two are important in an overall lawn care program, mowing sets the scene for your lawn's health.

Just as you wouldn't plan a driving vacation without having your car serviced, it's wise not to start the mowing season without a tune-up from a qualified independent power equipment dealer. In addition to sharpening the blade, your dealer will make sure your mowing deck is balanced and aligned so that sharp blades are cutting the right way.

The Shorter The Better?

Some homeowners live by that rule, but turf experts believe that many home landscape problems are caused by cutting lawns too short. What length should you trim the grass? According to Lowe, each type of grass has an optimum height, but the rule of thumb is never to cut off more than one third of the leaf at any one time. When you cut the grass short, there is less leaf to bring sunlight and water to the roots. You should let the grass grow a little longer in shaded areas or in a drought period.

To Bag or Not To Bag?

The best-kept lawn in the neighborhood isn't necessarily one that's "bagged" weekly. If you mow at the right height, grass clippings can be your yard's best source of "food." Just remember to convert your mower to bagging when grass is very wet or rake wet clumps off the lawn. If you feel you must bag, return those clippings to good use by composting them or using them as garden mulch. A great yard provides hours of pleasure, strengthens the environment and makes a great place to enjoy those warm summer months.

When mowing, never cut off more than one-third of the leaf at a time.

Kids! You Can Win A $1,000 Savings Bond

Hey, kids!
How well do you know Quincy historic and other familiar sites?

Here's a chance to test yourself and win a $1,000 savings bond.

A special spring contest for youngsters in Quincy public and parochial schools in grades K through 8 is being sponsored by the Quincy Center Business and Professional Association and co-sponsored by The Quincy Sun. There is no entry fee.

Deanna Garzarian of Phase II Jewelry, president of the QCBPA, said the contest is being held to encourage local families to discover how the area is rich in history and to rediscover Quincy Center as an ideal place to shop.

Photographs of 10 well known Quincy sites are being placed in the Quincy Center area and are appearing in The Quincy Sun.

The photographs also appear in contest entry forms donated by Stop & Shop and distributed to the Quincy schools.

The entry forms also contain 10 short verses that loosely describe the subject of each photograph. Hidden in the verse is a clue as to where in Quincy Center a copy of the photo-

Contestants then match the verse with the appropriate photo on the entry form and submit it to the QCBPA office, 1416 Hancock St., Quincy Center. Deadline is Friday, April 30.

Correctly marked entries will be eligible for a drawing to determine the winner of the $1,000 savings bond. The drawing will be held May 7 at The Quincy Sun, 1372 Hancock St., Quincy Center.

Entry forms are available at the QCBPA and The Quincy Sun.

For more information, call the QCBPA office at 471-3232.

Government Loans Provide Safety Net For Borrowers

By CAROL BULMAN
President

Conway Financial Services
In order to understand the benefits of the Federal Housing Administration and Veterans Administration loan programs, it is important to review their origins.

Prior to the 1930s, the federal government had no presence in the mortgage industry. By the dawning of the decade, the nation was in a state of turmoil -- real estate values had plunged to less than half the level of the previous year and the stock market crash and subsequent economic decline led to large-scale unemployment. This forced many home owners to miss their annual or semi-annual mortgage payments.

I know what you are asking: "People made their mortgage payments once or twice a year instead of every month?" At that time, this payment was common. It also was common for borrowers' financial troubles to be ignored by lenders until it was too late.

When that happened, circumstances snowballed -- people were unable to save, forcing banks into a severe liquidity crisis that caused them to sell the majority of their real estate holdings for far less than their value.

This need to sell real estate assets to obtain cash, coupled with the rise in foreclosures and tax sales, exacerbated the already crumbling real estate market.

In stepped the federal government. Beginning in the final year of the Hoover administration, federal legislation usurped, in part, control of real estate and mortgage-lending activities.

CAROL BULMAN

One of the several government actions in response to the Great Depression included the National Housing Act of 1934. This act created, among other things, the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC).

Over the years, the FHA has provided the framework for a true national mortgage market that would later lead to the creation of the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Association (Freddie Mac). These two agencies form the secondary mortgage market by purchasing loans from lenders, freeing up cash for the banks to make more loans.

The FHA began the use of a self-amortizing mortgage, in which the repayment of the debt (amortization) is scheduled in equal installments of principal and interest, rather than interest only.

Today, we are used to making monthly payments; can you imagine your payment being due only twice a year--six times the size of your current monthly payment? It boggles the mind how many problems could arise with just two payments per year.

The FHA also established a federally sponsored insurance fund to provide a safety net in case a loan went into default. This allowed customers with less than 20 percent down payment to purchase a home. Mortgage insurance was a major help to cash-poor victims of the Depression to re-enter the housing market, often to buy back their foreclosed homes from the bank.

Several years later, as a result of the glut of servicemen returning from World War II with virtually no money for a down payment of a home, the government established the Veterans Administration Guaranteed Mortgage Program.

Through the Servicemen's Adjustment Act of 1944, the VA loan enabled soldiers to buy a home with no money down. The government absorbed, in part, the cost of the insurance for the loan, and still does to this day.

Between 1945 and 1955, the country experienced the greatest housing boom in history, due in large part to these two mortgage loan programs. Other factors contributing to this boom were a demand for housing by those hit hard by the Depression and a renewed liquidity position for banks, resulting from the rebounding job market and an economic upswing.

Today, FHA and VA loans are still an important force in offering housing opportunities for many. Although created long ago, the original spirit of the two programs continues, as they allow many people who may not qualify through conventional means to purchase homes and realize the "American Dream."

Carol Bulman is president of Norwell-based Conway Financial Services, a mortgage brokerage firm owned by Jack Conway & Co. that maintains correspondent lending relationships with some of the top mortgage lenders in the East and originates a full line of mortgage products. Jack Conway & Co. is the largest independent real estate company in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 35 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

The Special Challenges Series

the PORTFOLIO MORTGAGE

Most mortgages are "sold off" to big money lenders. So even if you get a mortgage from a local bank, you still must fit the standards of the big lender. And you may lose the local service of your mortgage, too.

Here's an idea: We decide if you're credit-worthy, based on our own standards and judgment. We lend you the money. We service the loan. We don't sell it to anyone.

It's called a Portfolio Loan. It's one of over 200 varieties of mortgages we offer.

And right now, Bank of Canton Portfolio Loans cost no more than most conventional mortgages.

So if you'd rather be treated more like a person than a salable commodity, you'll find the special idea for you right here at the Bank of Canton. Call Judy Farmer today.

SPOTLIGHT ON HEALTH & FITNESS

Stretching Key To Getting A Good Workout Gardening

Many people will spend more time outside planting bulbs, mowing the lawn and pulling the weeds as spring-time approaches.

Your body may not be ready for exercise of the garden variety. Gardening can provide a great workout, but with all the bending, twisting, reaching and pulling, your body needs to be ready for it.

Gardening can be enjoyable, but it is important to stretch your muscles before reaching for your gardening tools. The back, upper legs, shoulders, and wrists are all major muscle groups affected when using your green thumb.

Performing simple stretches during these periods will help alleviate injuries, pain and stiffness.

What Can You Do?

The American Chiropractic Association, and local doctor of chiropractic, Dr. Steven Windwer, offers the following tips to make gardening fun and enjoyable as possible. It is important to prepare your body for this type of physical activity. The following stretches will help alleviate muscle pain after a day spent in your garden.

Garden Fitness Stretches
• Before stretching for any activity, breathe in and out, slowly and rhythmically. Stretch as far and as comfortably as your can. Do not follow the no pain, no gain rule. Stretching should not be painful.

• While sitting, prop your heel on a stool or step, keeping the knees straight. Lean forward until you feel a stretch in the back of the thigh, or the hamstring muscle. Hold this position for 15 seconds. Do this one more and repeat with the other leg.

• Stand up, balance yourself, and grab the front of your ankle from behind. Pull your heel towards your buttocks and hold the position for 15 seconds. Do this once more and repeat with the other leg.

• While standing, weave your fingers together above your head with the palms up. Lean to one side for 10 seconds, then to the other. Repeat this stretch three times.

• Do the "Hug Your Best Friend." Wrap your arms around yourself and rotate to one side, stretching as far as you can comfortably go. Hold for 10 seconds and reverse. Repeat two or three times.

When The Bulbs Are Planted...

If you already feel muscle aches and pains and did not complete the warm-up and cool-down stretches, there are ways to alleviate the discomfort. Apply a cold pack on the area of pain for the first 48 hours or apply a heat pack after 48 hours. If pain continues, consult a local chiropractor.

Maintenance Best Form Of Driving Vacation Insurance

Planning a successful summer driving vacation involves more than arranging overnight stays or knowing how many states will be visited on the journey. Attention to details, including preventative automobile maintenance, is the key to a stress-free driving vacation.

Before taking a trip, have your car inspected by a certified automotive technician. Things can go wrong no matter how well you prepare, so it's a good idea to carry emergency supplies. If you expect to be traveling at odd hours or off the beaten path, consider carrying a cellular phone for summoning help, if needed.

Don't overload your vehicle with luggage, AAA advises. A fully loaded vehicle can put excessive stress on tires, brakes and suspension components, so pack as lightly as possible. When loading the car, position luggage so it doesn't obstruct the driver's view or shift during braking or sharp turns.

Check your route for food, fuel and rest stops. Stopping every few hours will help fight fatigue. Make hotel or motel reservations beforehand.

It's a good idea to carry as little cash as possible. A major credit card and traveler's checks are safer options. Take the telephone numbers of friends to call in case of emergencies, and let someone know your itinerary.

AAA offers its members enroute planning, reservations, traveler's checks, car care advice and Emergency Road Service. No one can be assured of a perfect trip, but proper planning can increase the odds.

We need you.

Teachers Reject Contract

ers were voting on the contract, other units within the bargaining group, such as assistant principals and other staff attended the closed-door meeting, he added.

Originally, the teachers were offered a wage package which was similar to that offered to other city unions: 0-2-0-3-0-4 over a three-year period, which means 0 percent for the first 6 months, followed by 2 percent for the remainder of the first year; 0 percent at the start of the second year, followed by 3 percent at six months; 0 percent at the start of the third year, followed by 4 percent at six months.

But even at that offer, the starting salaries of teachers in Quincy with only a bachelor's degree would be below that of those starting in the Braintree or Weymouth public schools with the same credentials.

Hospital Partner Talks Continue

Mayor James Sheets continues to negotiate with officials from the Boston Medical Center in an effort to shape a partnership with Quincy Hospital which will benefit the city.

"Boston Medical is the only network we are presently negotiating with," said Sheets, "but we haven't ruled out anyone else at this point."

"If we don't reach an agreement for an affiliation, we'll just deal with it when it happens," he said.

"We have different strategies, and we'll take a wait-and-see approach and see if there is someone else we may deal with directly."

"Right now, we are very much into negotiations with Boston Medical, and there really is no reason to look elsewhere," Sheets.

Sheets discounted reports that he had scheduled a press conference tomorrow. But, he added, "we may have some information within the next five to six days. I don't know that for sure, but we don't have a press conference scheduled," he said.

It was only late last week that Lifespan, the parent company of New England Medical Center, withdrew its interest in affiliating with Quincy Hospital.

Sheets, who wants to keep Quincy Hospital as a full-service facility, acknowledged that financial considerations have always been at the front burner, noting that the city a few years ago incurred a $57 million bonded indebtedness to finance the expansion of the hospital. In addition, there are unfunded pension liabilities.

Boston Medical Center already has a working relationship with Quincy Hospital, providing staff to its emergency room and allowing use of its cardiac catheterization lab.

Sheets To Speak At Men's Prayer Breakfast May 2

The 52nd annual South Shore Men's Prayer Breakfast will be held Sunday, May 2 at 7 a.m. at Freeport Hall, Freeport St., Dorchester.

Men and women of all faiths are welcome to attend.

Guest speaker will be Mayor James Sheets. He graduated from Eastern Nazarene College, Cum Laude with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1958 and a Bachelor of Theology degree in 1959. He served from 1975-1978 as a member of the State Legislature, as a City Councillor in Quincy for 15 years and is currently in his fifth term as mayor of Quincy. Until becoming mayor, he served as a faculty member at Quincy College for 27 years.

Guest soloist will be

Paul Frazer, baritone. He also is a graduate of Eastern Nazarene College with a degree in music education and vocal performance. He was formerly a teacher of music and drama in the Hanson schools. In addition to opera, oratorio and musical comedy performances around New England he has been a featured performer at Quincy's First Night celebrations. He is now the baritone soloist at Bethany Congregational Church in Quincy.

Proceeds from the breakfast will benefit Interfaith Social Services, formerly the Protestant Social Service Bureau. Tickets are available for a $10 donation. For more information contact James Cameron, general chairman at 617-773-7535.

Opposition To Gasoline Storage

Opposition from neighbors, Ward 4 Councillor Michael D'Amico, and the License Board citing "incomplete plans" caused the D.Z. Motors, 245-249 Willard St. to have their request to store 300 gallons of gasoline in about 30 cars continued.

Abutters said they feared the amount of cars a detriment to a fire engine being able to get through the parking lot in case of a fire.

Attorney Thomas Flaherty, representing D.Z. Motors, said he thought the request from D'Amico about landscaping was "ludicrous" since the License Board had not voted as yet.

Normand Goyette, representing D'Amico said until a more detailed plan was presented to the board and the neighbors, D'Amico would still be in opposition.

Flaherty said the land is in "disarray" at this time, and that the new owners were planning to have the property completed paved. He said the hours would be from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Fire Chief Thomas Gorman said the West Quincy people who have lived in the area for years see their "neighborhood threatened" and said it would be "awfully tight" to have 30 cars parked in the lot.

He advised the owners to "go back" and reduce the number of cars.

Building Inspector Walter White concurred and said the board would need "additional plans" before voting on the matter.

Habitat Birdhouse Show Starts Friday

More than 300 bird houses built and decorated by local artists will be on display at the Sixth Annual South Shore Habitat For Humanity Bird House Show and Auction from April 30 to May 2 at the South Shore Plaza in Braintree.

Celebrities who have signed bird houses or contributed items this year include Aerosmith, Julia Child, Jerry Lewis, Peter Falk, Bill Cosby, Keith Lockhart, Mark Harmon, Katie Couric, Rosie O'Donnell, the 1999 Red Sox, the Boston Celtics, and Reba McEntire.

The show runs during regular mall hours. Admission is free. The bird houses will be judged before the plaza opens at 10 a.m. Friday.

Proceeds from the sale or auction of the unique bird houses will help South Shore Habitat For Humanity build affordable homes in partnership with local families in need. Six houses are currently under construction in Quincy, Rockland and Pembroke.

"We are debtors" - Romans 8-12...

In an age when the by-word is "Give me this" or "Give me that," words like "we are debtors" are not popular. Our first reaction is to deny it and say that we have met all our obligations and are not in debt to any man. But when we begin to think on the matter we come to realize that there is not a single moment in our lives when we are not obligated to someone or to something. We were born into a world where for centuries men and women have been laboring to make the burden of life a little lighter for us. Wars have been fought and blood has been shed so that we might have liberty. Churches and organizations have endeavored to foster and nurture the good in men, and through their combined efforts most of the people we meet on life's highway are reasonable and kind. Schools have banished much of our ignorance and Medical Science has conquered many of our diseases, and for these and countless other blessings "We are debtors."

CRITIC'S CORNER

DICK: In this flick, a historically-challenged comedy, high school students Betsy Jobs (Kirsten Dunst) and Arlene Lorenzo (Michelle Williams) wander off during a class trip to the White House and meet President Richard Nixon (Dan Hedaya). They end up becoming the official walkers of his dog, Checkers, and secret advisers to Tricky Dick during the Watergate scandal. (Never mind that Checkers was the Nixon family dog back in 1952 when Ike ran for president and Nixon was on the ticket for veep. Never mind that Nixon gave that famous "Checkers speech" to deflect criticism of his accepting gift for political favors way back in '52.)

Forget what you learned in the history books and prepare to be enlightened on 18 1/2-minute tape gags, slunk funds, paper shredding and everything else you never knew about the third-rate burglary that turned into a first-rate scandal in the 1970s ... the last good White House scandal!

THE LOVE LETTER: In the sleepy New England town of Lobsolly By The Sea, a letter has arrived that is going to wake things up. It is a love letter - ardent, sensual ... and unsigned. Everybody who reads it wonders who it's from. As the letter falls into different hands, the residents in the small town start to eye one another with renewed interest. Unexpectedly, one mysterious love note has the power to unlock some startling secrets, changing the lives of everyone it touches.

Based on the novel by Cathleen Schine, this is a winner. And it's bolstered by the superb cast which includes Kate Capshaw, Blythe Danner, Ellen DeGeneres, Geraldine McEwan, Julianne Nicholson, Tom Everett Scott, Tom Selleck and Gloria Stuart.

Your Horoscope by Natasha

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Go see an art film or buy a new C.D. The experience will be even better if it is shared with a friend or two. Going solo will not provide the outlet you need.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) It is time to forgive a past debt or to stop holding a grudge. You have the opportunity to work things out and proceed in a different direction.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You have a heightened awareness of your surroundings. Each new sight and sound is a delight and you are eager to share your enthusiasm with friends and family.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You may feel slightly uncomfortable in your own skin and perhaps a bit guilty about past actions. Take steps to put things right with others and within yourself.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Focus on your interactions with other people. You are capable of forging a major alliance or starting a small war - use your power wisely.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Keep a strict rein on your more hedonistic side. When consuming fattening food or specialty drinks, know where to set your limits.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) If you've been planning a trip, now is a good time to solidify your itinerary. Schedules, prices and other stress-causing details will magically work themselves out.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Subdue any impulses to start a fight or a frenzy. You may feel temporarily confused or ineffective but these feelings are sure to pass.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) It's a good time to mingle, network, reunite, etc. Friends and neighbors may decide to drop by and you are more than glad to entertain them.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) You feel oddly apathetic and somewhat lethargic. Any movement takes an effort - perhaps it's better to remain still for the time being.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Congratulate yourself on recent success. Others will support and encourage you; no self-effacement is necessary.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A strong sense of prosperity and security enables you to support the less fortunate. People are encouraged by your success.

YOU BORN THIS WEEK ... A: chameleon could not bleed better into its surroundings than do you, which is not to say that you are not noticed. Rather, you can become all things to all people, yet still maintain an innate sense of self and set very definite goals for yourself. You may be tempted to manipulate people and circumstances from time to time.

Adams Crypt Will Open Saturday As Deed Studied

chair ramp leads into the church, but presently a winding staircase leads down to the crypt.

Bennett, the church minister, said Tuesday that Arthur Ducharme, who has served as visitor program director in the past, will return.

"His job is to manage the building and provide public access. We work in cooperation with the National Park Service, who will provide a ranger or trained volunteer to give the guided tour."

Later this season, a copy of several Adams-related documents housed at the Massachusetts State Archives at Columbia Point will be added to the museum room outside the crypt, and others may be exhibited in the church lobby, said Bennett.

Last week Galvin offered to provide these replicas of these priceless documents. Bennett said he appreciated Galvin's gesture. The church has neither the security nor the climactic controls to display the original documents, said Bennett.

"What the Adamases mean to Quincy and to Massachusetts is being rediscovered," Galvin said last week, "especially with all the recent publicity of C-SPAN, the 'Amistad' movie and the forthcoming biography of John Adams by David McCullough." President John Adams also was the author of the Massachusetts Constitution, the forerunner of the U.S. Constitution, Galvin noted.

McNamee Campaign Co-Managers Named

Brian McNamee, Ward 6 City Council candidate, announces the appointment of campaign co-managers and two additional committee officers.

North Quincy High

graduates Michael Shields and Sean Glennon will be campaign co-managers. Glennon is a government student at Suffolk University. Shields, a Bentley College graduate, is a consultant for Arthur Andersen. Both appointees were organizers in 1997 when McNamee was a finalist for the Ward 6 seat.

"I attribute a large measure of the success we enjoyed to the efforts of Michael and Sean," McNamee said.

In announcing the appointments, McNamee said, "We're continuing to build our organization brick by brick. Since our announcement in January, we have gained the support of a cross section of our community — bankers to bus drivers. I'm confident as we continue to work hard going door to door we will continue to gain the confidence of the voter and eventually the trust which is so critical to receiving a vote on Election Day."

Appointed as committee officers were Maryanne Glynn and Joanne Swanton-Brown, both of whom served in the 1997 campaign.

All appointees are Ward 6 residents.

TESTIFYING BEFORE CONGRESS 5-year-old Gerald T. "J.T." McNeil III of Quincy spoke in the need for federal funding for research into interstitial cystitis, a disease which affects 700,000 Americans. Sitting with him was U.S. Rep. William Delahunt.

For Disease Research Funding 5-Year Old Testifies Before Congress

Gerald T. "J.T." McNeil III of Quincy is only 5 years old, but he was sitting before a congressional subcommittee last Thursday big as life, testifying on behalf of the Interstitial Cystitis Association.

J.T., a kindergartner in Mrs. Doreen Wholey's class at St. Agatha's School in Milton, was officially diagnosed 15 months ago with IC, a painful, debilitating bladder disease.

Wearing a navy blue jacket, white shirt and red necktie, he sat beside his congressman, Rep. William Delahunt, to testify before the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies in support of a $6 million request to fund further research into the disease.

Also testifying was J.T.'s mother, Merri Marden McNeil, a self-employed paralegal and an ICA volunteer.

She told the subcommittee her son can have headaches, abdominal pain, a burning sensation when he urinates and may need to urinate 40 times a day when the disease flares up. Or, he may feel fatigued after minimal activity.

"Many nights he sleeps with a hot water bottle to ease bladder pain. Many days he has to stop while playing with his friends because his bladder hurts," she testified.

"It is hard for J.T.'s brother [3-year-old Nicholas] and his friends to understand J.T.'s problem, because if you look at J.T., there are no visible signs of IC, as there are with many other diseases," she said.

Because of the disease, J.T. cannot eat many childhood favorites, like pizza, spaghetti or chocolate candy, but he does like pancakes and bacon and most vegetables, including broccoli.

"He can eat chicken McNuggets and French fries, as long as he uses no condiments like ketchup," said his mother.

Before the congressional hearing, Delahunt met with J.T. and his family in his office in the Longworth Building and presented J.T. with a certificate of special Congressional recognition

State Funds Seen Iffy $33-M For Hospital Not Easy

By MARILYN JACKSON

Before Quincy Hospital can affiliate with Boston Medical Center, the city must reduce the hospital's operating costs, Mayor James Sheets said Tuesday.

He estimates the city will have to pump $33 million into the hospital during the next seven years to make the affiliation palatable, to Boston Medical Center was incorporated in 1996 when Boston City Hospital, Boston Specialty and Rehabilitation Hospital and Boston University Medical Center Hospital consolidated and merged.

money...The financial implications for the city would be worse, and we would have to fund the deficit immediately, rather than working something out over the next six years."

But Sheets is concentrating on keeping the 282-bed hospital open and is counting on state and federal funding to bail out the financially-strapped city hospital. On Monday, he met with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's chief of staff to discuss the financial needs of the hospital and expected to return today (Thursday) for another day-long meeting.

After more than a year's search for a financial partner, Quincy Hospital a preliminary memorandum of understanding with Boston Medical Center last to form an affiliation which would keep Quincy Hospital a full-service, acute care hospital.

On the city's part, Sheets said some of the money necessary to facilitate the affiliation will come from this year's reserves.

"At the end of this fiscal year, we will probably be paying $396,000 on Social Security, $92,000 for stop loss and $256,000 on unem-

City personnel from the Department of Public Works and the Park Department will work alongside volunteers at these locations. Volunteers will be provided with their clean-up tools and a Cleaner, Greener Quincy T-shirt. Participants should bring their own gloves.

All volunteers are welcome to attend an appreciation barbecue hosted by Mayor James Sheets at the Richard J. Koch Family Park & Recreation Complex at One Merrymount Parkway. The barbecue will begin at 12:30 p.m. and is sponsored by Stop & Shop.

"I would like to thank each and every person who has made a difference in this city by participating in our Cleaner, Greener Quincy program," Sheets said. "Throughout our city, our parks and playgrounds are more beautiful, our streets and business districts are cleaner, and our city is now one of the most beautiful in the Commonwealth."

In conjunction with Cleaner, Greener Quincy, the Park and Forestry Department will again conduct a "Yard Care Conference" Saturday, May 22 at the Park and Recreation Complex, One Merrymount Parkway. Experts from the fields of turf care, gardening, tree-care and composting with give presentations and answer questions. The conference will be from 9 to 11 a.m.

The Park Department will sponsor the second annual "Neat Neighbors Contest" this year to recognize those people who maintain their yards and properties in the spirit of a Cleaner, Greener Quincy. Last year, 25 people were recognized as "Neat Neighbors" and more than 150 received honorable mention. Residents can nominate a friend or neighbor through the Park Department from Memorial Day through Labor Day.

"Cleaner, Greener Quincy has become must more than a one-day event; it has permeated every portion of our community," Sheets said. "Our business, residents and city personnel now make a year-round effort to keep our city clean and beautiful. Our collective efforts have resulted in a much better city to live, work, and raise a family," the mayor added.

Raising $33 Million For Hospital Merger Not Easy

ployment, funding we will have to take out of our reserves."

He also is anticipating additional state aid from the state surplus and from the state lottery.

And he is proposing adding 38 cents to the tax rate specifically earmarked for hospital costs. That would generate an estimated $8.4 million. For a home valued at $155,000, it would mean 14 cents a day or $56 a year, based on this year's tax rate, he said.

"We need to flatten out the hospital debt," said Sheets. "By helping to do away with the operational debt, we are looking at a Sept. 30 hopeful changeover to affiliate with Boston Medical Center."

"For fiscal year 2000, we will be picking up $750,000 for malpractice insurance," a cost he said which is incurred whether the hospital says open or closed.

In addition, Sheets said he would be asking for $1.5 million in legal fees to do all the legal work for the hospital to affiliate with Boston Medical Center. "We'd also need to make a $425,000 payment on a Citizens Bank loan," he said.

Citizens Bank issued a $7 million line of credit to the hospital to keep it in operation, but the hospital has only been paying the interest, said Sheets.

"And we would make a direct payment [of $1.76 million] to Quincy Hospital to begin the process of helping them into a new status." That totals $4.435 million, "the same amount we would be investing in the hospital for the next five years."

"But instead of investing, the malpractice insurance, the legal fees, etc., these would be payments that would go directly to the hospital to help it regenerate itself and come back to the point, along with BMC, it would be a break-even position," said Sheets.

Sheets said he is exploring several funding sources to help the city.

Just before the 5 p.m. deadline last Thursday, state Rep. Stephen Tobin, at Sheets' request, filed an amendment to the state budget seeking $12.1 million to help finance the deficit at the hospital and make it more attractive to Boston Medical Center, Rep. Ronald Mariano said.

"I don't think it's going to pass," said Mariano. "It's going to be hard to convince 350 other cities and towns to pay $12 million to keep Quincy Hospital open."

"It's not going to be easy," agreed Tobin. "The public perception is that we are in a booming economy. The stock market is pressing 11,000. But on the state financial level, we are trying to marry two diverse ideas of cutting taxes and maintaining spending."

"I have no illusions," Tobin continued. "This is a Herculean task to work out in a one-week time period, but nobody is complaining."

"We know what we've got to do, and we're focused on the task. We care very much about Quincy Hospital and health care for our constituents."

"We want to do everything we can; Quincy Hospital serves a vital need. The mayor has done a good job. He cares about the hospital."

"The good news is that Boston Medical Center is interested in Quincy Hospital as a partner of some sort," Tobin continued. "We have someone who's interested in getting into the 21st century with us for health care. Clearly, Quincy Hospital needs a partner, or forget everything else."

"If Boston Medical Center hadn't stepped forward, then there's no one there."

"The downside is the financial package which will need state assistance to make it work," said Tobin.

The city has a slight financial cushion as well. For fiscal 1999, the city raised $89.7 million in taxes, although it had a levy limit of $93.7 million and could have collected an additional $4 million in taxes.

Assessor board chairman Marion Fantucchio said the city can raise a minimum of $96 million in taxes, and that does not factor in the valuations resulting from new construction.

In addition, the city council is considering adopting a state law which allows assessors to tax new construction as of July 1. Quincy presently bases its valuations on what was on a parcel of land as of Jan. 1. A hearing on the measure has not been held.

Asked whether the city would finance any of the hospital debt to keep the facility open, both Auditor Robert Foy and Sheets said they would not. Quincy presently has a bond rating of A.

The city last sold general obligation bonds of $11.9 million in March 1998. Subsequently, it went out for $14 million in anticipation bonds which will be replaced in June by $18.75 million in general obligation bonds, said Foy.

Of that sum, $10 million is earmarked for the new Marshall School, $7 million for the Point Webster Middle School and $1.75 million for water repairs, he said. He added that the city wants to get the hospital matter settled first before it seeks issuance of the bonds.

However, if the hospital is forced to close, the city would be faced with an immediate deficit and would probably finance the debt through a bond issue. That could affect the city's bond rating.

In a Quincy Hospital press release issued Friday, the hospital announced the preliminary memorandum of understanding between it and Boston Medical Center.

Save Gas and Money
Shop Locally

Touting the benefits of the proposed affiliation, Quincy's fifth largest employer noted that its payroll and benefits for its 1,100 employees total close to $40 million, a significant impact to the South Shore economy.

The affiliation will reinforce Quincy Hospital's ability to continue serving the elderly, who comprise 17 percent of the city's population, and strengthen its health care programs for the 18,000 residents of the Asian community.

In addition, the hospital would be able to offer to Quincy and South Shore residents the state's Health-Net Program, of which BMC is a founding partner. It provides health care to underinsured and uninsured working persons. The hospital noted that it has been providing $7.8 million of uncompensated care annually, which translates to 4,500 patient visits.

Quincy Hospital already is affiliated with Boston Medical Center for cardiac and emergency services. The new relationship would allow the hospital to provide enhanced services through Boston Medical Center's programs in family medicine, pediatrics, women's health, behavioral health, orthopedics, neurosurgery and surgery.

In addition, the affiliation would allow for expanded teaching programs at Quincy Hospital through the Boston University School of Medicine.

Within the next 60 to 70 days, a definitive memorandum of understanding should be executed which could lead to a full-fledged affiliation.

Council President Kolson said a hearing on a home rule petition which will ask approval for the city to divest itself of the hospital probably would be held May 27. The petition must be submitted to the state legislature by mid-July.

Council Votes $25,000 For Police Department

The City Council Monday night appropriated $25,000 for the police department to pay for uniforms and equipment for several new officers.

The council acted without first referring it to the finance committee.

Police Chief Thomas Frane detailed how the money would be used — $2,500 for the balance for uniforms for academy graduates; $2,000 for uniforms for the April graduates; $6,000 for uniforms for the five officers which are expected to attend either the June or September police academy; $5,000 for a new canine and related training for the K-9 officer, Richard Churchill; $1,200 for a uniform and equipment for a second mounted police officer; $4,500 for uniforms and equipment for three new motorcycle officers who are replacing three who were assigned to the special operations and detective units, and $3,800 for uniforms and equipment for the harbor patrol and eight spare traffic supervisors.

The Council also approved an additional $20,000 in council expenses which originally had been budgeted at $59,510.

Under questioning by Councillor-at-large Francis X. McCauley, Auditor Robert Foy said that legal advertising in the Quincy Sun and The Patriot Ledger accounted for some of the extra costs. Excessive duplicating costs also accounted for the overrun.

"There are additional charges for council mailings," beyond the service charge, explained Foy.

The $20,000 will be disbursed by the council president, said Foy, noting that more than $5,000 has been earmarked for advertising costs.

8 Candidates Take Out Nomination Papers

Nomination papers for this year's city election were made available Monday, and by Tuesday, eight candidates had taken them out.

Five of the eight will challenge incumbents, and three will seek the open Ward 6 city council seat.

Robert Boussey of Farington St., who has run unsuccessfully for the Ward 3 seat, now wants to shoot higher. He took out papers for mayor.

Others who picked up papers:

Ward 1: Greg Hanley, Shed St., and William Weed, Curlew Road.

Ward 3: John Cain, Jr., South Central Ave.

Ward 5: Arline Goodman, Revere Road.

Ward 6: Maryann Mahony, Hummock Road, Brian McNamee, Billings Road, and Joseph Newton, Glover Ave.

Mahony, Newton and McNamee seek the seat Bruce Ayers is leaving at the end of the year after being elected state representative. Both McNamee and Newton have run for the seat against Ayers.

Weed and Hanley are challenging incumbent and Council President Peter Kolson in Ward 1. Cain seeks the Ward 3 seat now held by Patrick McDermott and Goodman, the Ward 5 seat Steve Durkin holds.

Deadline for returning the nomination papers with sufficient signatures is 5 p.m. July 27.

Durkin Suggests Possible Community Center At WYC

Ward 5 Councillor Stephen Durkin would like the city to look into the possibility of teaming up with the Wollaston Yacht Club to provide space for a community center on the premises.

Durkin said Monday it would be an ideal site. Previously, the Beechwood Life Center had served informally as a community center for Ward 5 until it relocated.

Durkin said he had not spoken to officials from the yacht club and had asked recreation director Barry Welch and planning director Richard Meade to look for alternative sites.

"We may be sending the wrong message," said Councillor-at-large Paul Harold who noted that the yacht club had just spent considerable money and its members anticipate a successful season.

Council President Peter Kolson said there may be other obstacles to prevent such an arrangement. He wondered whether there is heat in the building during the winter and whether the city would also have to negotiate with the MDC which owns the land under the yacht club.

Fireman Has His Say In Book

Quincy's Simon Fireman, who ran afoul of the political campaign finance laws and became an issue himself in the 1996 Presidential election, has his say in a new book he has written.

Haven't seen the book itself which is entitled "No Justice" but it reportedly makes a pitch for campaign finance reform.

Fireman, a millionaire businessman and generous benefactor, writes in part in the forward:

"The quagmire in which I found myself mired in 1996 (and in which, I was to learn, the whole country is mired) was not an everyday event.

"It was a defining event in my life with consequences that started out in the realm of the very personal and quickly expanded into deep concerns about issues of national importance. So, I felt compelled to write this story, which is both private and public."

The quagmire was deep and costly.

Fireman and his company, Aqua-Leisure Industries based in Avon, were fined a total of $6 million on charges he made illegal campaign contributions to GOP presidential nominee Bob Dole and other Republicans.

According to the charges some of Fireman's employees wrote checks to the candidates and the Republican National Committee and he then reimbursed them. That's a no-no.

Fireman was a vice chairman of the Dole presidential campaign and the charges erupting near the end of the campaign dulled Dole's criticism of the Democratic National Committee's fundraising activities.

Henry Quinlan of Omni Publishing Co. in Boston, publisher of the book, has written letters to Fireman's friends informing them he has reserved a limited number of copies of the book for them.

And, in the letter says:

"Simon's desire in writing this book are twofold: that his voice will be joined in the chorus of Americans who want our campaign finance laws reformed for the benefit of all and that others unjustly caught in the web of the legal system will know that it is above all survivable and that the legal system is not flawless."

Quinlan says the book "will be a significant event in the publishing world for it combines a penetrating look at one of our country's biggest problems, campaign finance reform, with a compelling personal story of someone abused by a legal system that is found, in this case, to be capricious, arrogant, and greedy."

And, this little teaser:

"The book also recounts a very touching love story that demonstrates again the power of love to triumph over all."

Until his problems with the campaign finance laws,

Fireman was better known for national appointments by Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan and his philanthropy to worthy causes and institutions such as Quincy Hospital and the Hebrew Rehabilitation Center for the Aged.

CITY CLERK Joseph Shea, who underwent abdominal surgery at Quincy Hospital three weeks ago, came back to work part-time this week.

He was at his desk when nomination papers for candidates in this year's city election were made available.

"I'm feeling pretty good," he says. "I'll be putting in a few hours a day for a while."

Shea is rooting for Quincy Hospital to finalize a partnership with the Boston Medical Center or some other else.

"I've got terrific care at Quincy Hospital," he says. "It would be a shame to lose that hospital. We really need it."

"And, it would be sad," he adds, "for all the nice people who work there to lose their jobs."

JOHN NICOLSON of WJDA came through his hip surgery with flying colors.

John was operated on April 22 at Brigham and Women's Hospital and is convalescing at his Cohasset home. And, champing at the bit to get back to work. In fact, he hopes to start putting in at least a few hours at the station next week.

His doctors tell him his hip will be stronger than ever thanks to surgery.

BILL DRAICCHIO, a member of the Quincy Board of Registrars, has added an extra touch to the job.

Draicchio, probably the sharpest dresser in City Hall, recently framed three neckties and has them hanging in the Election Department facing the public coming to the office window.

One tie has a Democrat donkey on it, one a Republican elephant and in between them, one emblazoned with the American flag.

An added appeal for residents to register whether as a Democrat, Republican, unenrolled or some other party.

Draicchio is also City Hall's "Candy Man." A donates and keeps a dozen or so jars filled with a variety of candy in the City Clerk's office. Help yourself.

Central Middle School Students Raise $2,956 For Pine Street Inn

Central Middle School recently completed its participation in The Pennies Campaign, a program of Pine Street Inn and the WB56 FamilyFirst Fund.

Central students raised $2,956 for Pine Street, New England's largest provider of services for homeless men and women. Central is the largest contributor of the 140 schools across eastern Massachusetts that participated this year, according to Cynthia Bevinno, development officer at the Pine Street Inn.

"We are grateful for the dedication and enthusiasm of students across the state who prove that small contributions add up to make a big difference in the lives of homeless people who come to Pine Street Inn for help.

This year promises to be the most successful one yet for the campaign," Bevinno said.

Students participating in the campaign learned that a contribution of 50 cents buys a homeless person a pair of socks, $1 pays for a nutritious meal, and $100 provides an evening meal for all guests of the Women's Inn at Pine Street. Pine Street Inn serves more than 1,100 homeless men, women, and children each day, providing food, shelter, clothing, basic medical care, literacy programs and job training, and permanent, supportive housing.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1920's POSTCARD view of the National Sailors Home located near Fenno and the junction of Kendall Street in the Beechwood Knoll section of Wollaston. The rest home was opened shortly after the Civil War and served indigent US Navy Veterans for over 50 years. After its demise, Duane's wrecking company tore the building down in 1931. The land was then subdivided and Model Homes, Inc. of Boston developed Beechwood Knoll. Some of the streets in this area including Sims and Perry Roads were named after naval heroes. Recently, a group has been formed to preserve the memory of the sailors who died here and were buried in the cemetery in Grossman Park across Fenno Street.

Student Protests And Officer Faulkner

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

As I read The Quincy Sun news story (Students In Protest To Face Discipline, April 22), I couldn't figure out why area students at Quincy and North Quincy high schools cared about a black reporter from Philadelphia who is convicted cop killer.

As a police officer, I have absolutely no sympathy for this cause but nationwide students have taken up the cause. Students right next door in Weymouth had their own walk-out, too.

Mumia Abu-Jamal, a former Black Panther, sits on death row after being convicted in the 1981 death of Police Officer Daniel Faulkner. He's been on death row since 1982. His conviction was upheld by the state Supreme Court in 1989. His supporters say he was framed because he was a black activist. Abu-Jamal's jailhouse writings have turned him into a worldwide celebrity but when all is said and done a police officer died back in 1981 following a routine traffic stop.

However, I am pleased that students are getting concerned about someone and something other than the latest clothing styles or sneakers. I thought this kind of political activism ended in my youthful days back in the Sixties and Seventies. Students still have a right to protest but it should have been done during non-school hours. Moreover, I was young once and at their age, one is looking to make the biggest impact possible.

A school walkout sounds cool to these kids as it probably felt to me years ago. Hey, these kids could be doing a lot worse in school, right? Getting politically involved is never a bad thing even if the cause is suspect.

Personally, I shed no tears for a convicted cop killer. He had his trial and the jury spoke loud and clear. All of us, however, have a right to speak up and protest when we see perceived injustice. If we don't, can we live with wrong and do nothing?

Don't be duped by national groups who may be looking to use you as fodder for their political agenda. Don't take their words lone. Research the cause you support. See if the facts are there. If you still believe you're right, protest!

Student protesters also have to know as I learned years ago, there are consequences to your actions. If you violate school policies, you will be disciplined. It goes with the territory of standing up for your beliefs. I commend students for taking a stand but just make sure you're not standing in someone else's political quicksand.

Finally, remember Officer Faulkner who had a life and a family and who is still missed by loved ones. Who matches for him? Who remembers he lived? Who cares about his life?

Yeah, you can march and holler and protest but make sure you're not being misled.

Quincy T-Shirts Are Available Here

Editor, The Quincy Sun:

I would like to respond to a letter appearing in The Sun Thursday, April 28.

I can speak with certainty about the members of the Quincy Center Business & Professional Association, not to the exclusion of other possible outlets, regarding the availability of Quincy, Massachusetts t-shirts.

Amongst our membership there are several places to purchase Quincy, Massachusetts t-shirts year long:

Abigail's Crossing, 1350 Hancock St.; Caryn's Corner, 695 Adams St.; Quincy College Bookstore, 1357 Hancock St., carry such an item on a regular basis. Everlasting Engraving, 9 Cottage Ave., generally has some in stock but will custom-make something immediately to suite individual needs.

Styling and pricing are different at each of these outlets but a visit to all would offer a wide selection suiting all tastes and price points. Additionally you will find that ties, totes, afghans and assorted memorabilia are available in several other Quincy Center gift type stores. Traditionally at most tourist stops, historical society sites and federally supported Park Service locations do not carry a wide assortment of souvenir type items. Visitors generally rely on small businesses in the area to provide this type of purchase as well as refreshments and dining possibilities.

For directions to any of these outlets, contact the QCBPA office at 617-471-3232.

Some 200 attended the dedication where School Committee Charles Sweeney served as master of ceremonies. Reay Sterling, Jr. spoke on behalf of the family and presented the school an oil painting of his father to be hung in the entry way.

Among the other speakers were Principal Arnold Rubin, former School Supt. Dr. Paul Gossard and Fire Lt. Nicholas Malvesti, who was a former student and athlete under Sterling.

COUNCIL REJECTS EXEMPTION FOR CONFLICT OF INTEREST

By a 5-4 vote, the City Council voted not to exempt members of non-paid city boards from the state's new conflict of interest law.

The exemption vote was offered by Councillor Richard Barry, with support from Councillors Walter Hannon, David McIntosh and Francis McCauley. Voting against were Councillors George Burke, John Koegler, George McDonald, John Quinn and Joseph LaRaia.

McCauley, a bank executive, favored abolishing the entire conflict of interest law. He pointed out that young men coming along in banking would be virtually barred from public service by the law.

TIERNY DEDICATION HIGHLIGHTS DAY

The dedication of the corner of School St. and Hancock Court opposite St. John's Church in memory of Fr. Thomas Tierney highlighted Loyalty Day ceremonies this week. A former curate at St. John's, Tierney was the coordinator of the city's annual Christmas parade and a former chaplain for the Fire Department.

An estimated 5,000 people lined the one-mile parade route along Hancock St., with 1,500 marchers. Sponsored by the George F. Bryan VFW Post, the program was headed by Post Commander John Dinneen and Veterans' Council head Lawrence Butler.

QUINCY-ISMS

The City Council meeting took on the guise of the Democratic convention with Councillors Burke and Barry boosting the candidacy of Lt. Gov. Frank Bellotti for governor. Bellotti had yet to announce his candidacy. Barry said, "Fifty years from now when the history of Quincy is written, the name of Frank Bellotti will be up there with John Adams and John Quincy Adams." ... MDC Detective Leo Papile was cited for efforts in saving the life of a man who attempted suicide from the Mystic River Bridge. ... A plaque was dedicated at the Beechwood Knoll School in memory of Louis Grossman who donated the land for the school. Sponsored by the Amvets, Commander Anthony Famiglietti was ticket chairman with Attorney General Edward McCormack as the main speaker. ... BUNIONS

Many people go to the podiatrists office with complaints of pain due to the "bump" on the side of their foot.

Bunions are a common deformity. Contrary to popular belief, they are not caused by bad shoes, although they can be irritated by certain shoes. Bunions are usually a hereditary condition, related to the structure of the foot which causes a bone in the foot to spread, making a prominent "bump."

Initial treatment is conservative, such as shoe gear modification. If these therapies fail, surgical correction can be performed.

The surgery consists of cutting the bone and relocating it to a corrected position. The procedure performed and the recovery time is based on the severity of the bunion.

If you are experiencing bunion pain and would like more information, make an appointment with a Podiatrist.

If you are experiencing any of these symptoms or other foot problems, call to make an appointment at our office at 773-4300. We are located at 1261 Furnace Brook Parkway, Suite #18, Quincy, and are affiliated with Carney, Quincy and South Shore Hospitals.

Raymondi Seeks Residential Rezoning

The City Council took under advisement a request from Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi to rezone land on both sides of Berry Street and the northeasterly side of Quincy Avenue, numbers 48 and 52. The land presently is zoned Business B.

Attorney Lawrence DiNardo said he supported rezoning the property along Berry Street but opposed changing 48-50 Quincy Ave. to Residence B because the rest of Quincy Avenue, from Elm Street to Scannell Street consists of businesses.

DiNardo told the councillors that the homeowner, Ann Palmer, his client, had executed a written purchase-and-sale agreement to sell the property to Anthony Falco, a Quincy attorney.

Rezoning the property would pose a hardship of the Palmer family and would cost his client $50,000 in value. He said Palmer wants to move to a one-floor home so that her 40-year-old invalid son, Brian, can move around in his wheelchair.

Falco told the council he wanted to move his office with five lawyers to the house, which he would rehabilitate, where he would provide off-street parking for 12 to 15 vehicles.

Still, Falco said he would need a variance from the Zoning Board of Appeals where the public could make sure their concerns are met.

The planning board last month unanimously approved the rezoning proposal.

Peter Moran of 12 Berry St. said he appreciated Falco's input, but noted that under the Business B zoning, a restaurant or a garage could be placed at the site.

Keeping the area as a Business B zone "threatens the value of the homes and the neighborhood," said Moran, who noted that the house is next to the central fire station.

Moran added that he was asked whether he would like to sell his adjacent property which would add another 15,000 square feet to the parcel. "That would not sit well with my neighbors," he said.

Moran added that Quincy 2000 is encouraging residential use in and around Quincy Square in an effort to revitalize the area. "Right now, Quincy Avenue [in this area] has a decent mix" of businesses.

"Do we need more businesses in the neighborhood? I don't think so," said Moran, pointing to the number of accidents and a recent pedestrian fatality in the area.

"Shaw's is moving; Quincy Oil is becoming a bank, and there will be a traffic light at the end of Water Street. Berry Street already is crowded...an additional business is not good for property values," Moran said.

The council will decide within the next two months as to whether to rezone the area, which DiNardo suggested was "spot zoning."

Business banking with people. What a concept!

We admit it. In today's world of voice mail, internet and digital interconnect, the idea of speaking face-to-face with an experienced professional who makes decisions — without needing a computerized assessment of your application — may seem radical.

It's how we do business banking here at The Bank of Canton.

5-Year Old Testifies Before Congress for "his leadership in creating awareness and understanding of interstitial cystitis and his commitment to expand federal medical research of this disease."

After the hearing the McNeils — J.T. and his brother and his parents, Merri and Gerald McNeil Jr. — visited the National Zoo where he saw a panda bear and a hairy pig and saw the Lincoln Memorial and the White House.

"Washington was really cool," J.T. said when he returned home. "I got to go in an airplane, and it was my first time in a taxi too. I liked Congress; it was really big."

J.T.'s mother said the family first discovered that J.T. had a urinary frequency problem after he was toilet trained, but it was another two years before physicians diagnosed the disease.

The disease is often thought of as an "older woman's disease," explained his mother, and many children initially are misdiagnosed.

According to a recent urological study by the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases, about 700,000 Americans suffer from IC.

J.T. said he wants to become a doctor when he grows up and find a cure for IC, she said, adding that his fund-raising efforts for IC research have not been limited to giving testimony. Earlier he sold $400 worth of raffle tickets to benefit the ICA's pilot research program and was one of the top five ticket sellers in the country.

Foot Notes

Surgeon-Podiatrist

KOHLER'S DISEASE

the foot permanently.

The tarsal navicular is a bone located in the foot's midarch. Kohler's disease, which mainly afflicts children between the ages of three and eight, is degeneration of this bone caused by diminished blood supply that is the result of rapid bone growth. This disease is seldom seen in children ten years of age or older. The main symptom of Kohler's disease is pain above and slightly to the rear of the midarch, though there may also be some redness and swelling in the painful area. Once the problem is properly diagnosed, treatment calls for the use of arch supports and rest. Kohler's disease usually is self-limiting in duration and it does not damage the foot permanently.

Pain is often the first sign of a foot or ankle condition for patients of any age, but pain doesn't always reveal the cause of an injury. The best way to determine the exact cause, location and seriousness of an injury is to have a podiatric evaluation including medical history, examination and test. And, here at 110 W. Squantum Street in North Quincy, complete instructions for follow-up care and prevention are also an integral part of any treatment plan. Please call us at 617-472-3466 for an appointment for foot care for the family.

PS: Children may find relief by walking on the outside edges of the feet. If you notice this peculiar gait, have your child's feet checked.

McDermott Calls Neighborhood Meeting

Ward 3 Councillor Patrick McDermott will hold a neighborhood meeting at 6:15 p.m. Tuesday, May 11, to discuss a special permit request to allow Bob's Automotive to sell up to six used vehicles on the Hilda Street premises.

Owner Robert Abraham had asked the License Board to grant a used car license last February, and the board referred him to the Zoning Board of Appeals which will hear the matter at 7:15 p.m. May 11.

Inspections Services Director Walter White previously said the site did not meet the requirements for the issuance of the license. McDermott said other issues such as traffic congestion, parking, noise and overall cleanliness at the site also would be discussed.

Those who cannot attend the meeting can comment on the Abraham's proposal by writing to McDermott at City Hall, 1305 Hancock St., or by calling him at 471-3366.

Construction Begins on Underground Electric Cables

Commander Shea Boulevard Work

New England Power Company (NEP), and its affiliate, Massachusetts Electric Company (MECO), will begin installing underground electric cables along Commander Shea Boulevard in North Quincy the first week in May. Both companies are subsidiaries of the New England Electric System (NEES).

Over the next several months, construction contractors for NEP and MECO will be installing cable pipes in Commander Shea Boulevard. Initial work will occur in several specific areas as construction workers put in the manholes along the cable route. This operation will be followed by installation of the cable pipes. This construction work will take three and one-half months to complete.

Neponset River Crossing

In early April, construction contractors successfully installed cable pipes under the Neponset River from Rainbow Point Park in Dorchester to Squantum Point Park in North Quincy.

North Quincy Substation

Work on the North Quincy Substation on Spruce Street began in April. This work is scheduled to be completed in April 2000.

THE ORDINATION OF Rev. Alicia Corea May 5, 1949 was reenacted Sunday at Houghs Neck Congregational Church. Rev. Dr. Peter, kneeling with Alicia Corea, reads the prayer of rededication. Participants from the left are Rev. George Robinson of Marion, Rev. Rachel Keefe of Quincy, Rabbi David Jacobs of Temple Beth El, Quincy; Rev. Richard Anderson of Swansea, Rev. Lloyd Noyes of Depew, N.Y.; Rev. Malcolm Brummitt of Brewster, and Rev. Margaret Stoddard of Wilder, Vt., a seminary classmate.

THE FIRST QUINCY woman ordained a minister and one of the first in the state, Rev. Alicia Corea reflects on her 50 years as a minister during a rededication ceremony Sunday at Houghs Neck Congregational Church where she and her husband, Rev. Dr. Peter Corea, have been co-pastors a half century.

At Ordination Reenactment And Fellowship Dinner Rev. Alicia Corea Honored On 50th Anniversary

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

The sun shone brightly Sunday as more than 250 parishioners and friends of Rev. M. Alicia Corea crowded the Houghs Neck Congregational Church to celebrate the 50th anniversary of her ordination.

Not only were people standing in the back of the church to honor a loyal and loving friend, others gathered in the church basement watching it on a large TV screen.

Rev. Corea was the first woman in the City of Quincy and one of the first in Massachusetts to be ordained. She was ordained to the Christian ministry on May 5, 1949.

Her husband, Dr. Peter V. Corea, whom Alicia referred to as "the angel on my shoulder" was ordained in the church in 1947 and together, they have cared and helped everyone who came in contact with them.

Addressing the crowd and expressing how Alicia had touched their lives were several ministers from the South Shore.

In celebration of her ministry, Rev. Lloyd L. Noyes, a retired Baptist minister spoke of his long-time friendship with Alicia. He was a friend from seminary days who served as best man at Alicia and Peter Corea's wedding and who also participated in her ordination 50 years ago.

Scripture reader Rev. Malcolm J. Brummitt, grew up at Houghs Neck Congregational Church and was ordained in 1962. A retired U.S. Army chaplain, he is an interim minister in many local parishes.

Rev. Richard Anderson also grew up in the church and was ordained in 1978. He now serves The First Christian Congregational Church in Swansea.

Rabbi David Jacobs, a longtime friend of the church and who has served Temple Beth El in Quincy for many years.

Representing the church was a personal friend, Joan M. Kirby, a lifelong member of the church and financial secretary, member of the choir, and chair of the Diaconate.

Rev. Paul Sinn from the Pilgrim Association. He is a long time friend who is retired from the Southeastern Area of the Massachusetts Conference.

After each had finished speaking, they drew applause for their kind words about their "friend" Alicia.

While they all spoke of her love and friendship, she listened with a smile on her face and said later "whether these words are deserved or undeserved, they sound pretty good," again bringing applause from the audience.

At the end of the church service, as Dr. Corea was to say the prayer, he commented that he had "waited a long time." Then he and Alicia knelt down together for the reaffirmation of her ordination, and stood together exactly as they had 50 years before. You couldn't hear a pin drop, then after it was over, a thunderous applause.

The choir was under the direction of Arden T. Schofield. One of the many beautiful songs they sang was "Ode to our Church" written in celebration of the Houghs Neck Church by Alicia and Arden Schofield.

Following the church service, more than 300 people gathered at Lantana for dinner.

There Alicia was presented with citations from city Council President and Ward 1 Councillor Peter Kolson, former Mayor and Councillors At Large Francis McCauley, and Paul Harold.

Kolson, who said he was was not a church member said he had "learned to dance in the church basement."

District Judge Thomas Brownell said many of the many wonderful things they had done in the community "have largely gone unsung." Then on a lighter note, he told of how he used to sneak into the church basement and shoot pool with someone "who had a key."

Expressing their friendship for Alicia were Dr. Roger W. Comeau, Dr. Carol Lee Griffin, her niece Jannatha Coffin-Malia, Peter D. Johnston, Marion Taylor, Gloria Brummitt, church clerk.

Speaking about Alicia's support of St. Boniface's mission in Haiti was Rev. Richard DeVeer, pastor of St. Boniface Church in Germantown.

There were also others who praised Alicia for her friendship and love and advocacy for "peace."

Arrangements for the event were made by Gloria Brummitt, Carol Lee Griffin, Shirley Harrington, Arden Schofield, Richard Shaw, Jean Bragg, Joan M. Kirby, Martha Chase, Sam Rounseville and Edwina Robinson.

Throughout the event, Rounseville, a friend since he was a young boy greeted many of us as we walked into the church and later at Lantana's.

MRS. MARION TAYLOR, who was a delegate from Houghs Neck Congregational Church to the Ecclesiastical Council that voted for Rev. Alicia Corea's ordination 50 years ago, recalls the event as "a beautiful day." Shown with her are Rev. Alicia Corea, Rev. Dr. Peter Corea and Gloria Brummitt, Houghs Neck church clerk.

FR. RICHARD DEVEER, former pastor of St. Boniface Church, Germantown, now at St. Rose Church, Chelsea, tells of the support Rev. Alicia Corea and Rev. Dr. Peter Corea have given a mission in Haiti.

Butch Mahoney Honored By City Council

John "Butch" Mahoney says he is not retired.

The City Council Monday night presented Mahoney with a citation and a wall clock in recognition of the 27 years he has devoted to the Quincy schools.

"You've done a tremendous job as a teacher, a police officer and a coach," Ward 6 Councillor Bruce Ayers told Mahoney. "I'm proud to call you a friend."

Ayers said he has known Mahoney all his life. The recognition is "well-earned, well-deserved. You are a valuable member of our team. Thank you for your outstanding service."

Ayers told Mahoney the presentation of the clock represented "all the time you have invested in the city of Quincy."

All the other councillors heaped accolades on Mahoney as well.

Mahoney said he became an English teacher in Boston in 1961, after the Patriots no longer needed him.

He moved to the Scituate school system where he spent 10 years as an English teacher and as a coach before a group of Quincy residents, including Police Chief Francis Finn, Dr. Charles Djerf and a few others asked him to come to Quincy.

"It's actually 38 years I have been working with young people," said the grandfather of seven.

"I'm not going to retire. I support young people," he said, vowing to continue his work in other capacities.

For the past 15 years he has worked with the U.S. Department of Justice. Most recently, he developed a two-day program which focused on "Safe Schools, Safe Communities," which was presented in Providence in March.

"Quincy is right on top of this issue," he said. "I compare Quincy to all the major cities, and I want Chief [Thomas] Frane to know how great the city is, the city council, the school committee."

"I may have retired from the school system, but I ain't retired," he quipped. Standing beside him, beaming, was his wife, Ruth, whom he married more than 41 years ago.

Mahoney said he has been invited to write a new proposal for the National Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention which will seek both public and private funding.

Councillor-at-large Paul Harold praised Mahoney for his work in successfully creating a Korean War Memorial outside Veterans Memorial Stadium, tending to every detail, from bricks and benches. "It was done with great style, on time and under budget," Harold observed.

On a lighter note, he thanked Mahoney for re-supporting his uncle's sailboat. "My uncle didn't call the Coast Guard or harbor-master, he called Butch, who found it in the middle of a neighborhood in Boston chained to a telephone pole!"

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi noted that Mahoney "had brought a tremendous amount of talent and expertise" to everything he did, touching the lives of many young people. He noted that Mahoney also quietly worked behind the scene to find homes for children and people in need.

"We're gratified he's not moving away," Raymondi said.

Councillor-at-large Francis X. McCauley recalled 1967 when both he and Mahoney ran for public office and lost. He chose a different path, said McCauley. "He concentrated on education."

HONORED FOR THE TIME he has invested in Quincy and its schools, John "Butch" Mahoney, center, and his wife, Ruth, hold a clock the City Council presented him Monday night. With him are Councillors Michael D'Amico, Francis X. McCauley, Bruce Ayers, Stephen Durkin, Mrs. Mahoney, and Councillors Timothy Cahill, Mr. Mahoney, and Councillors Peter Kolson, Daniel Raymondi, Patrick McDermott and Paul Harold.

McCauley said he'd like to say, "Job well done...Your job probably is the most difficult in the school system where you have to make split-second decisions, use tact, firmness and discipline."

Many disciplinary problems within the school never surfaced, McCauley said, because Mahoney nipped them in the bud and put the kibosh on them.

Mahoney said when he came to Quincy, teachers were more than educators; they were social workers and counselors too, mixed with a little bit of law enforcement and detective.

"The key is collaboration" with all the various agencies to ensure the well-being and success of the student, he said.

Greg Hanley Ward 1 City Council Candidate

Greg Hanley of Shed St., is a candidate for the Ward 1 City Council seat.

Hanley said he will formally announce his candidacy at a campaign kickoff Thursday, May 13, 7 to 11 p.m. at the Quincy Yacht Club in Houghs Neck.

"I will seek this office because I have enjoyed my involvement in the community and I feel this is the next step in the process of making a difference in the community where I live and have grown up," he said.

Hanley said he has lived in Quincy 28 years and has been involved in the community 20 years.

Hanley and his wife, the former Ann Marie Sullivan, have four children: John, 7, Kerri Ann, 6, Erin, 2, and Margaret, 6 months.

Hanley attended Quincy public schools. He graduated from Archbishop

GREG HANLEY

Williams High School and Norwich University in 1987 with a B.A. in English.

The former owner and operator of Screamer's Ice Cream on Hancock St., he is now employed at the P.V. Sullivan Supply company in Quincy.

His affiliations, he said, include:

The Quincy City and Ward 1 Democratic Committees, the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, the Quincy Center

Business and Professional Association, and as a board member of the Quincy Community Action and Quincy Youth Baseball. He was chairman of the St. Boniface Church 40th anniversary committee.

He is currently at Quincy Youth Baseball coach and chairman of the St. Boniface Boy Scout Council. He is a past member of the Quincy Labor Local 133.

Hanley said he will focus on improving communications between ward councillor and residents.

"Involving the community in the decision-making process will be a major theme of my campaign," he said. "By involving residents directly concerning issues that affect their daily lives, we build an interest and a civic pride that is vital to the health of our neighborhoods."

Arline Goodman Candidate For Ward 5 Council Seat

Arline Goodman of Revere Rd., long active in the community, announces her candidacy for the Ward 5 City Council seat.

She said her goal is to provide increased communication between Ward 5 residents and the council while continuing her role as an advocate for neighborhood concerns and responsible business development.

Goodman said she will address several issues through her candidacy, especially those affecting the quality of life for residents of Ward 5.

A member of the Citizens Advisory Committee for the Quincy Center Concourse, she said she supports the concept of the concourse but opposes taking homes by eminent domain to build the roadway.

Goodman noted she has lived alongside the Town Brook for 29 years and has thus experienced damaging floods first hand.

ARLINE GOODMAN

She said she is also concerned with environmental issues related to the brook such as controlling pollution and preserving the habitat for marine life. She said she strongly believes that flood control can be achieved without damaging the environment.

Goodman said she is an enthusiastic supporter of the Quincy public school system of which three daughters are graduates. She was active in parents' groups at Point Webster, Central Middle and Quincy High School, and member of the City-Wide Parents Council.

She said she is still concerned with maintaining high quality of education and strongly supports Quincy's teachers.

Goodman said she favors family-centered events and noted that she and her husband, Dr. Carl Goodman, have volunteered as coordinators for Quincy First Night since its beginning. She said she also support plans to bring more tourists to the city.

She said one issue the Ward 5 councillor must address is the need to improve pedestrian and traffic safety.

She said she is also interested in seeing the city maintain ownership of the JFK Health Center and the Central Middle School buildings.

"I look forward to meeting with all citizens in Ward 5 to listen to their concerns and to learn more about the issues that affect each neighborhood in the district," said said.

State Police Community Sub-Station At Wollaston Beach

State Police will open a Community Policing Sub-Station at the bath house on Quincy Shore Drive at Wollaston Beach, announce state Sen. Michael Morrissey, and state Rep. Steven Tobin and Rep. Bruce Ayers.

State Police will utilize funding the Legislature appropriated last year along with some other existing funds to staff two State Troopers at the sub-station beginning as soon as next week.

State Police will begin the walking police patrol along Wollaston Beach every Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings until 1 a.m. in the morning.

"The Department's 'Zero Tolerance' Initiative will be aimed at combating public drinking, loud music and racing vehicles up and down Quincy Shore Drive," Morrissey said.

"The Quincy legislative delegation has worked hard in conjunction with the State Police to cut down on residents' complaints in the area. These 'Zero Tolerance' measures will work to improve the quality of life and make this popular, recreational facility a safe and enjoyable site all year round," Tobin said.

"Each year when the weather turns nicer, we receive a number of complaints from area neighbors who are concerned about the noise and public drinking along the beach," Ayers said.

"We are excited that the State Police have implemented a more visible presence along the beach to ease some of the concerns of neighbors."

Lt. Brian Greeley, commander, H-6 of the State Police at Old Colony building, has jurisdiction of the area.

One of the major areas of focus will be an additional patrolling of the isolated parking areas near the beach, including Caddy Park.

"Last year alone the State Police investigated 45 motor vehicle accidents on Quincy Shore Drive and made over 120 arrests," Tobin said.

Because of the State Police increased presence along the beach, Quincy lawmakers are seeking an increase funding for the State Police Wollaston Beach patrols from $25,000 to $35,000.

Free Admission For Mothers At Adams National Historic Park

As a special celebration of Mother's Day, the Adams

National Historic Park will offer free admission to all mothers.

The Adams National Historic Park encompasses 12 acres and 11 historic structures, six of which will be open for tours — the Birthplaces of President John Adams and John Quincy Adams, the "Old House," the Stone Library and the 1873 Carriage House.

The United First Parish Church, where Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams and their wives, Abigail Adams and Louisa Catherine Adams are entombed, is also open but is not part of the national park. A nominal admission fee is charged.

The park is open seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., but visitors first must register for tours at the Visitor Center at 1250 Hancock St. in the Presidents Place Galleria. General admission is $2.

A trolley leaves from the visitor center every 30 minutes, visiting the birthplaces first, then the "Old House," before returning to the center. It is a short walk to the United First Parish Church.

Tour space is limited and is filled on a first come, first served basis. For further information, call the visitor center at (617) 770-1175.

The Adams National Historical Park, established in 1946, commemorates the distinguished men and women in the Adams family who dedicated their lives to the development and service of the United States.

No More Bikini Contest

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

"Shooters will not participate any further in the contest" was the assurance given by Atty. Robert Fleming to the License Board at Tuesday's meeting.

Last week, the board voted to "cease and desist" a weekly advertising campaign and "contest sponsored by Kahlua."

The contest featured women in bikinis and T-shirts and was held each week at Shooters. at 58 Ross Way.

According to Police Chief Thomas Frane Shooters did not have a cabaret license for any kind of entertainment.

Frane said at Tuesday's meeting that Det. Lt. Robert M. Perchard had brought the matter to his attention and that he considered the contest "inappropriate behavior as well as a public safety issue". Also a fire arms and drug violation.

Apparently, according to Frane, patrons outside were caught with a drug violation and carrying fire arms.

Fleming assured the board that the contest would no longer be conducted. He said he was "not trying to justify" the situation and called it "entirely serious", thought the press had "punished Jim Pansullo and Kevin

Calling the owners, "two solid young men" and both Quincy natives who have been in the business for 10 years, without "one incident", he said instead have done "a lot of public good".

Citing their participation in the Senior Olympics, the Paul Hussy Road Race, the Thomas Crane Public Library and Fr. Bill's Place he said the one incident was "giving a bad impression to the city."

Fleming noted that both Pansullo and Ryan thought that with a DJ the license could have expanded to the contest. But with some unruly patrons it got "a little out of hand."

Fleming said the cease and desist order was a "message they had to get:" and assured the board that the contests were over.

After Fleming's promise, Frane who said he "respected Fleming and appreciated his candor" agreed that the club had "not a single complaint" in the ten years and called the contest a "good idea gone bad" as an "isolated incident".

Fire Chief Thomas Gorman, who was acting chairman in the absence of Joseph Shea said as downtown Quincy "struggles" things like this are "not acceptable", but said the owners have shown in "good spirit" that they would stop the contests.

After the meeting, Frane asked the board to research the law department to see if persons who hold an alcoholic license will not be able to encourage "happy hours" or sell T-shirts depicting the same.

Gorman said he would have the answer from the city solicitor by next week.

The matter of Shooters was placed on file.

Kitchens Take A Shine To Stainless Steel

(NAPS)—The gleam of stainless steel kitchen components and appliances, once found exclusively in the cooking and food preparation areas of commercial restaurants and institutions, is showing up more and more in residential kitchens.

Beautiful to look at and featuring low maintenance finishes, homeowners are buying increasing numbers of kitchen appliances featuring sleek stainless steel exteriors. Whether for a gourmet cook or someone that wants to give the appearance of a gourmet cook, commercial looking kitchens are popular in homes across the country.

Appliances such as oversized refrigerators and freezers, high-end commercial style ranges and range hoods clad in stainless steel are hot with homeowners desiring the look of a professional chef. Residential kitchens are even beginning to feature industrial sinks, including all-in-one stainless steel sinktops—countertops with integral sinks—as well as extra large self-standing basins made of heavy-gauge stainless steel. To complement these industrial sinks, there are wall mounted faucets with hoses, permitting easy filling of large pots and vases.

Why is stainless steel so popular in these commercial style kitchens? According to the sink experts from Elkay Manufacturing Company, stainless steel is built to last and preserves its good looks over time. Stainless steel is versatile enough to complement virtually any kitchen decor. No matter how fixture trends change, a stainless steel sink will always be in style—unlike the once "trendy" blue, yellow, and green porcelain sinks, which now look out-of-date in many kitchens.

When looking for a stainless steel sink to complement a commercial style kitchen, the experts from Elkay offer the following tips:

- Look for a high-quality sink, crafted from at least 18- or 20-gauge heavy stainless steel, the proper thickness for maximum durability and long life. The lower the gauge, the thicker the steel.

- It's also important to consider the depth and overall capacity of the bowls. Large, deep bowls can accommodate large pots and pans.

- A high-quality stainless steel sink has a satin finish that will camouflage minor scratches and look new for years. Don't be fooled by a shiny mirror-like finish; these sinks tend to scratch easily.

For more information about stainless steel sinks, sinktops and faucets, contact Elkay Manufacturing Company, 2222 Camden Court, Oak Brook, IL, 60523, (630) 574-8484, or visit their Web site at www.elkay.com.

Realtors Urge Legislators Oppose Transfer Tax Proposals

Approximately 20 members of the South Shore Association of Realtors Inc. (SSAR) recently participated in the 13th annual "Legislative Day on Beacon Hill" activities sponsored by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR).

The local Realtors met with Senators Michael Morrissey, Robert Hedlund and Robert Creedon, and Representatives Bruce Ayers, Ronald Mariano, Mary Jeannette Murray, Frank Hynes Robert Nyman, and an aide from Representative Viriato Manuel DeMacedo's office to discuss a number of bills filed in the current legislative session which will impact the real estate industry.

In particular, the SSAR members urged local lawmakers to defeat the Community Preservation Act, a statewide enabling measure which includes a transfer tax component that would allow Bay State communities the ability to impose a new tax on the sale of a residential or commercial property without first petitioning the Legislature.

The SSAR, which along with the MAR opposes transfer taxes when it says it due to the onerous discriminatory nature in which they are applied to homebuyers and property owners, instead, advocates that communities utilize the state's Open Space Bond Fund, request an override of Proposition 2 1/2 or adopt a property tax surcharge approach similar to one passed by Barnstable County voters last year.

"To add a new sales tax on homes and businesses, or authorize a 1 percent increase in the deeds stamp fee as the Community Preservation Act proposes, will merely perpetuate fears over the already high cost of housing in our state," said SSAR President Richard Lannon.

Lannon noted that the association unequivocally opposes all transfer tax proposals on the basis that they tax a small percentage of the population, namely buyers or sellers, for programs and services enjoyed by the entire community.

In addition to expressing their views on the transfer tax initiatives, SSAR officials asked local legislators to support a MAR-introduced bill which would create a statewide uniform code for implementing the Commonwealth's Title 5 septic regulations. Passage of the measure would help provide consistency in the interpretation of the Title 5 rules and ensure that communities resist the temptation to use the septic regulations for purposes other than public safety, such as zoning or setting minimum lot size requirements.

"Uniformity of the septic regulations from community to community will help ensure that their enforcement is based on science and not arbitrary guidelines, and will promote proper administration of the rules across the state," Lannon said.

On another environmental issue, the Realtor community is advocating legislation to increase the state's lead paint tax credit from $1,500 per unit to $2,500 per unit. In the past decade, the costs to remove or encapsulate lead-based paint to comply with state laws have risen substantially, yet the current $1,500 tax credit has not changed since it was established in 1987.

The SSAR says it believes that efforts to make the lead abatement process financially feasible for homeowners and landlords is essential to ensuring that the Legislature's goals for the Commonwealth's lead paint program are achieved.

Realtors are rallying also supporting a bill to

Flynn & Co. Broker Quincy Commercial Property

Daniel J. Flynn & Co. commercial broker Scott Buffington recently negotiated the sale of 190 School St. in Quincy, a 1,440 square foot office building located just beyond the Quincy Center area.

The property, located on a 2,880 square foot lot, sold from School Street Realty Trust to new owner MKBA Realty Trust for $125,000. Buffington represented the previous owner and located the new buyer.

Flynn & Co. President Paul Talkowski praised Buffington's diligence in brokering the deal.

"Since joining Flynn & Co., Scott has brought in quite a number of new listings, and we are now starting to reap the rewards of his hard work. Right now, he is close to closing several transactions," Talkowski said. "He has done a commendable job."

Kitchens Take A Shine To Stainless Steel

(NAPS)—The gleam of stainless steel kitchen components and appliances, once found exclusively in the cooking and food preparation areas of commercial restaurants and institutions, is showing up more and more in residential kitchens.

Beautiful to look at and featuring low maintenance finishes, homeowners are buying increasing numbers of kitchen appliances featuring sleek stainless steel exteriors. Whether for a gourmet cook or someone that wants to give the appearance of a gourmet cook, commercial looking kitchens are popular in homes across the country.

Appliances such as oversized refrigerators and freezers, high-end commercial style ranges and range hoods clad in stainless steel are hot with homeowners desiring the look of a professional chef. Residential kitchens are even beginning to feature industrial sinks, including all-in-one stainless steel sinktops—countertops with integral sinks—as well as extra large self-standing basins made of heavy-gauge stainless steel. To complement these industrial sinks, there are wall mounted faucets with hoses, permitting easy filling of large pots and vases.

Why is stainless steel so popular in these commercial style kitchens? According to the sink experts from Elkay Manufacturing Company, stainless steel is built to last and preserves its good looks over time. Stainless steel is versatile enough to complement virtually any kitchen decor. No matter how fixture trends change, a stainless steel sink will always be in style—unlike the once “trendy” blue, yellow, and green porcelain sinks, which now look out-of-date in many kitchens.

When looking for a stainless steel sink to complement a commercial style kitchen, the experts from Elkay offer the following tips:

- Look for a high-quality sink, crafted from at least 18- or 20-gauge heavy stainless steel, the proper thickness for maximum durability and long life. The lower the gauge, the thicker the steel.

- It's also important to consider the depth and overall capacity of the bowls. Large, deep bowls can accommodate large pots and pans.

- A high-quality stainless steel sink has a satin finish that will camouflage minor scratches and look new for years. Don't be fooled by a shiny mirror-like finish; these sinks tend to scratch easily.

For more information about stainless steel sinks, sinktops and faucets, contact Elkay Manufacturing Company, 2222 Camden Court, Oak Brook, IL, 60523, (630) 574-8484, or visit their Web site at www.elkay.com.

Realtors Urge Legislators Oppose Transfer Tax Proposals

Flynn & Co. Broker Quincy Commercial Property

Approximately 20 members of the South Shore Association of Realtors Inc. (SSAR) recently participated in the 13th annual "Legislative Day on Beacon Hill" activities sponsored by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR).

The local Realtors met with Senators Michael Morrissey, Robert Hedlund and Robert Creedon, and Representatives Bruce Ayers, Ronald Mariano, Mary Jeannette Murray, Frank Hynes, Robert Nyman, and an aide from Representative Viriato Manuel DeMacedo's office to discuss a number of bills filed in the current legislative session which will impact the real estate industry.

In particular, the SSAR members urged local lawmakers to defeat the Community Preservation Act, a statewide enabling measure which includes a transfer tax component that would allow Bay State communities the ability to impose a new tax on the sale of a residential or commercial property without first petitioning the Legislature.

The SSAR, which along with the MAR opposes transfer taxes when it says it due to the onerous discriminatory nature in which they are applied to homebuyers and property owners, instead, advocates that communities utilize the state's Open Space Bond Fund, request an override of Proposition 2 1/2 or adopt a property tax surcharge approach similar to one passed by Barnstable County voters last year.

"To add a new sales tax on homes and businesses, or authorize a 1 percent increase in the deeds stamp fee as the Community Preservation Act proposes, will merely perpetuate fears over the already high cost of housing in our state," said SSAR President Richard Lannon.

Lannon noted that the association unequivocally opposes all transfer tax proposals on the basis that they tax a small percentage of the population, namely buyers or sellers, for programs and services enjoyed by the entire community.

In addition to expressing their views on the transfer tax initiatives, SSAR officials asked local legislators to support a MAR-introduced bill which would create a statewide uniform code for implementing the Commonwealth's Title 5 septic regulations. Passage of the measure would help provide consistency in the interpretation of the Title 5 rules and ensure that communities resist the temptation to use the septic regulations for purposes other than public safety, such as zoning or setting minimum lot size requirements.

"Uniformity of the septic regulations from community to community will help ensure that their enforcement is based on science and not arbitrary guidelines, and will promote proper administration of the rules across the state," Lannon said.

On another environmental issue, the Realtor community is advocating legislation to increase the state's lead paint tax credit from $1,500 per unit to $2,500 per unit. In the past decade, the costs to remove or encapsulate lead-based paint to comply with state laws have risen substantially, yet the current $1,500 tax credit has not changed since it was established in 1987.

The SSAR says it believes that efforts to make the lead abatement process financially feasible for homeowners and landlords is essential to ensuring that the Legislature's goals for the Commonwealths, lead paint program are achieved.

repeal the existing state law that requires homeowners to investigate for and disclose whether Urea Formaldehyde Foam Insulation (UFFI) was used in the home. Since the statute's enactment in 1986, the sale of UFFI was banned and few homes have been found to harbor the dangerous gas. For this reason, the association believes it is time to eliminate the obsolete statute.

Realtors also discussed with their legislators, its Escrow Dispute Resolution initiative. This bill seeks to minimize costly delays and legal fees that consumers and real estate brokers can incur when a deposit dispute arises between a homebuyer and seller. Specifically, the bill clarifies an escrow brokers can incur when a deposit dispute arises between a homebuyer and seller. The bill clarifies an escrow agent's responsibilities to consumers and clients when a sale falls through and both sides demand the deposit. This initiative preserves the rights of homebuyers and sellers to settle their dispute out of court and provide mutual written instruction to the broker, or, if they choose, have the matter adjudicated.

At the "Day on the Hill" program, SSAR members, along with more than 200 Realtors from across the state, heard from Secretary of the Commonwealth William F. Galvin, a number of public officials in state government including Speaker of the House Thomas M. Finneran, and Stephen D. Pierce, executive director of the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency (MHFA).

Among Realtors attending the program were: John Cafferty, Richard Lannon, Bill Perry, Mary Dawson, Diane Brueggeman, Judy Quinn, Richard Coughlin, Charles Repeta, Pam Goodwin and Joanne Manning.

Ribbon Cutting Marks Marina Place Grand Opening

Marina Place, a new independent and assisted living community with 110 apartments located in Marina Bay in Quincy, recently held its grand opening.

Mayor James Sheets helped Marina Place's first resident, Alice Kowalcik, a Quantum resident for more than 45 years, cut the ribbon. Community leaders were invited to attend the celebration along with healthcare professionals and residents of Quincy and surrounding communities. Also in attendance were residents of Marina Place and their invited guests.

"This is a wonderful place for our seniors to choose to live," Sheets said in offering best wishes to the residents and staff of Marina Place.

Executive Director Patricia Garre said Marina Place offers very attractive options in both independent and assisted living for seniors.

"We also have an innovative Alzheimer's Care Program that is customized to the needs of individuals with early-stage Alzheimer's and other dementia-related conditions," Garre said. Responding to the high level of interest from consumers and healthcare professionals, she added, "Clearly there is a need for the many benefits and amenities that assisted living has to offer the residents of Quincy and the South Shore area."

Assisted living is an apartment style housing option for seniors who need a helping hand with some daily living activities and medication management, or who no longer wish to live alone. Garre noted Marina Place offers residents bright apartments, personal care services, companionship, social, cultural and fitness activities, dining, private van transportation, weekly housekeeping and more.

Guests at the grand opening enjoyed live music, refreshments and guided tours of the four-story building that houses 110 studio, one bedroom and two-bedroom apartments, each with a kitchenette, full bath and oversized windows. Marina Place also has a variety of community rooms, an outdoor patio and garden, and several walking paths.

"Marina Place is designed to help residents feel at home and enjoy the company of other residents and guests in comfortable community rooms," Garre said. "We have a lovely living with fireplace, and warm and relaxing library, and a country kitchen with fireplace where residents can bake or simply enjoy a cup of afternoon tea. Our main dining room opens onto an outside patio where umbrella tables offer a cool spot in the summer and a private, formal dining room is available for entertaining families and friends."

Marina Place was developed and is owned by a local Massachusetts company, the Newton Group, LLC (TNG), based in Needham. The Newton Group currently owns five assisted living residences in Massachusetts and plans to build another dozen assisted living residences over the next two years in Massachusetts and Rhode Island. The company responsible for daily operations at Marina Place is Boston-based Senior Living Residences, LLC (SLR) who manages more than a dozen assisted living residences in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

For more information about Marina Place, call (617) 770-3264.

MWRA To Test Water Pipelines May 11-12

MWRA announces it will conduct routine water pipeline maintenance in Quincy Tuesday, May 11 and Wednesday, May 12.

Though the work will not disrupt traffic, it may affect water pressure during the days of the work, and could cause water discoloration for several days after.

The North Quincy and Squantum areas will not be affected, the MWRA said.

While this poses no health hazard and is safe for consumption, residents may wish to store several gallons of water, prior to Tuesday morning, for drinking and cooking purposes. In addition, residents should avoid washing white or light colored clothing in washing machines for this period of time.

For more information, call MWRA Community Coordinator Michele Gillen or Ted Cosgrove at (617) 788-1170.

SPOTLIGHT ON HEALTH & FITNESS

Juicing Up Your Diet

(NAPS)—Here's a juicy bit of news—Americans, it seems, really enjoy their juice. In fact, juice bars are becoming so popular, Entrepreneur magazine recently ranked them as among the hottest business trends of the coming year.

Enjoying juice at home, especially with the help of a juicing machine, can be a fun and easy way to get many of the vitamins, minerals and other nutrients you need in your daily diet. Millions of Americans, it's estimated own such a machine—though it's also estimated over 75 percent of them are mostly unused.

Nutritionists point out that turning fruits and vegetables into juice can make them even better for you than before. Because juicing removes fiber, many of the important nutrients found in plants can be absorbed more easily by the body—sometimes within minutes—without too much effort on the part of the digestive system. As a result, they say, more of the nutrients are absorbed.

How good can juice be for you? According to the U. S. Department of Agriculture, one glass of juice made from half a pound of fresh carrots contains protein, calcium, iron, potassium, vitamin A, Vitamin C and small amounts of the B vitamins.

Nutrition research suggests three juices should form the core of any effective program of drinking juice for health: a green vegetable juice, a carrot juice and a beet juice. To help more people get the benefits these vegetables provide, one company has come up with powders and caplets containing the dried essence of carrots, beets and barley leaves. Called Just Carrots, RediBeets and Barleygreen, they are packaged together as the Garden Trio and available through more than 58,000 independent distributors throughout the United States and Canada.

Choosing A Pharmacist Who Is Right For You

Gary W. Kadlec, President, APhA

(NAPS)—When choosing a pharmacist, many people simply look for a pharmacy that is convenient, either close to home or to where they work. While location is clearly important, you should carefully choose a pharmacist who is the right match for you and your family.

Your pharmacist should be someone you know and trust. You should give as much consideration to choosing your pharmacist as you do to choosing a doctor. Pharmacists are health care professionals specializing in medicines and their appropriate use. Because of this, your pharmacist plays an important role in your personal health care. To help you select the one that is right for you, consider the following tips:

1. Shop around. Stop by several pharmacies and ask to speak with the pharmacist. Talk to them about their background and any special needs you might have.

2. Consider your entire family's pharmacy needs. Often, a pharmacist can help you with special circumstances, such as when you are taking care of an elderly relative. If you have aging parents that live nearby, ask if it is possible to deliver prescriptions to their home and send the bill to you.

3. Compare prices and services. Larger chain stores often have low prices and many pharmacies, particularly independent stores, try to stay competitive by offering personal services such as consultations and home delivery.

4. Ask about payment options. Will the pharmacy accept your insurance coverage? Does the pharmacy accept your credit cards? Is it possible to set up an account?

5. Assess the level of personal service. How accessible is the pharmacist? During what hours are they available to answer your questions?

It is important to choose one pharmacist with whom you can establish an ongoing relationship. By choosing one pharmacist, a complete record of the medicines you take is in one place, making them easier to coordinate and manage. Your pharmacist can alert you to possible drug interactions—particularly if you take a number of different medications—help you track refills on important prescriptions and provide any necessary details on short notice.

Choosing the right pharmacist for you and your family will help you stay well and make the best use of your medications.

North Quincy High School girls' track team split meets over the past week, losing to powerful and undefeated Bridgewater-Raynham, 85-51, and taking a 75-61 decision from Barnstable to improve to 2-3.

Winning against BR were Lynda Wilson (2-mile, 12:02.8, league's leading performance), Lena Yven (discuss), Colleen Lahar (triple jump), and Maureen Holleran (javelin, state qualifying 100'7").

Placing second were Kellie Conley (400), Allie Lacey (800, state qualifying 2:29.5), Natalie Caron (mile), Kate Markhard (high jump), Jackie Murphy (discuss), Yven (shot) and Lauren Sleeth (javelin). In the Barnstable meet North accumulated a large lead as the running events were held first, and hung on as the Cape Red Raiders won every field event. North's youngsters showed great composure under pressure to turn in multiple personal bests and state qualifiers.

Highlights of the meet were Lauren Sleeth's 105'9" javelin throw taking second, but breaking the NQ frosh record; Kate Markhard tying for first in high jump (4'8"); Colleen Lahar's personal best 32'8 1/2" in triple jump, good for second; and Lena Yven's state qualifier 85'9" in the discuss. Fourteen personal bests were turned in, a season high.

Winning for NQ were Kellie Johnston (100, 200), Kellyrose O'Brien (400), Lynda Wilson (2 mile), Laura Wells (300 hurdles), the 4 x 100 relay team of Maureen Holleran, Kara Cheesman, Meghan Ginty and Katelyn McDonald; and 4 x 400 team of Natalie Caron, Laura Wells, Gen O'Brien and Kellyrose O'Brien.

Taking seconds were: Kellie Conley (400), Allie Lacey (800), Lynda Wilson (mile), Lahar (300 hurdles), Sarah Houghton (2-mile), Lahar (triple jump), Sleeth (javelin), Ellen Tang (discuss), and Yven (shot). Placing third were: Meghan Ginty (100), Natalie Caron (800), Linda Nguyen (mile, 2-mile), Johnston (long jump); Wells (triple jump), Holleran (javelin); Yven (discuss) and Jackie Murphy (shot).

North hosted Plymouth South on Wednesday.

At the fifth annual Carver Invitational held Saturday, Lauren Sleeth broke the meet record in the javelin, and Kellyrose O'Brien and Natalie Caron won individual events. Freshman Sleeth's throw of 100'10" broke the old record of 95'6" set by Jaime James of Plymouth North in 1995.

Other scoring (top 6) athletes:

Natalie Caron (2 mile, 12:30.2, first); Laura Wells (300 hurdles, 51.6, second, and triple jump, 28'2", fifth); Colleen Lahar (300 hurdles, 53.3, fourth, and triple jump 32', second); Katelyn McDonald (28.7, 200 meters, second); Kellyrose O'Brien (400, 62.7, first); Allie Lacey (400, 64.1, third); Linda Nguyen (mile, 6:12.2, second); Jackie Murphy (shotput, 25'3", fifth); Kate Markhard (high jump 4'6", sixth).

Non-scorers who turned in personal bests were Ellen Blaney (200, 37.4); Meghan Haines (400, 72.5); Beth Houghton (javelin, 62'10") and Samantha Chaisson (high jump, 4'6").

Jimmy Kennedy Memorial Run For ALS June 12

The second annual Jimmy Kennedy Memorial Run for ALS will be held Saturday, June 12 with an 11 a.m. start from Veterans Memorial Stadium.

Last year, hundreds of runners braved a driving rainstorm to race along the five-mile course through the city's streets and beachfront. Men and women, young and old, and familiar public figures, ran to honor the memory of Jimmy Kennedy, a Quincy native, husband and father who died in 1997 at age 31 from Lou Gehrig's Disease.

Kennedy was an academic and athletic standout at North Quincy High School and Northeastern University, a graduate of Georgetown Law School, and a practicing attorney before being stricken with ALS. His father, Christopher, Quincy school committeeman and former Dean of Students at Northeastern University, also died from ALS.

In 1998 race raised over $20,000 for the fight against the disease, Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis. It is best known as Lou Gehrig's Disease, named after the Yankee legend, whose death from the disease first brought it to the world's attention in 1938. To make this year's event, Mayor James Sheets has proclaimed the week of June 6-13 as ALS Awareness Week in the city.

ALS is a progressive disease that attacks nerve cells called motor neurons, which control the movement of voluntary muscles. As these cells are destroyed, victims gradually lose the ability to stand, walk, speak, and swallow. The disease is invariably fatal.

ALS claims more than 5,000 victims every year, with approximately 13 new cases diagnosed each day. An estimated 300,000 Americans, who are alive and apparently well today, will die from ALS. In 90 percent of cases, victims have no family history of the disease.

Funds raised by this year's race will go directly to the Cecil B. Day Laboratory for Neuromuscular Research at Mass General Hospital in Boston.

The race is open to runners of all ages and abilities. There is also a 2.5-mile fitness walk in conjunction with the day's events for those who would like to show their support. There will also be activities for the whole family.

Last year's event was attended by over 500 runners with hundreds more spectators and supporters, including former Governor Michael Dukakis, Olympic Speedskater Eric Flaim and House Speaker Tom Finnen.

Boston Marathoner Bill Rodgers plans to participate in this year's event.

To make a contribution, sign up for the race or walk, or donate time or services, Race Directors Richard Kennedy (781-383-6008) or Martin Levenson (617-492-4040 ext. 385, e-mail: mlevenson@mac-gray.com.

SPRING CAR CARE

Warm Weather Brings New Driving Challenges

You've survived winter's ice-covered roads and frigid temperatures, but spring and summer bring unique driving challenges. To help motorists handle the primary seasons of auto travel, AAA Southern New England officers offer the following information:

The heavy rains of spring and summer can quickly lead to dangerous flood conditions. AAA offers the following tips for motorists dealing with such conditions:

water with extreme caution. Do not attempt to drive through deep water or on bridges and roads that are heavily flooded.

• Even if you are confident that your car can make it through the flooded area, it is still possible that water could be forced into your engine compartment, damaging or destroying your engine.

• If there is a risk of flash flood, avoid traveling on roads that run along streams or drainage ditches.

Pothole Blues
With spring comes baseball, flowers and potholes. A direct hit a pothole can cause vehicle alignment to be thrown off and can damage steering components, tires and wheels. To prevent or minimize damage from potholes:

• Drive slowly on pothole-filled roads.

• If there is sufficient time and space, maneuver around the pothole but do not swerve wildly.

• Slow down as you approach a pothole, but when directly over the hole, do not brake. Applying the brakes causes the car's weight to shift to the front wheels and can increase damage from the impact.

• When driving on pothole-filled roads, hold the steering wheel firmly to avoid losing control.

Construction Safety
Warm weather signals the start of many road construction projects. To safely navigate through construction zones:

• Slow to a safe speed, which is usually posted through the construction area.

• Obey all signs and signals.

• Watch for pedestrians and work vehicles.

• Change lanes with caution.

• Expect sudden stops.

Heat Dangers
Under extreme heat, the temperature inside a parked car can reach more than 190 degrees in just 30 minutes. When dealing with such dangerously high temperatures:

• Don't leave children or animals unattended in a car, not even for a short period of time.

• When parked, use a sun shield to cover the windshield to minimize heat build-up and to help protect the car's interior. Cover metal and plastic parts on seat belts and child safety seats to prevent burns.

• Open the vehicle's doors and let the interior cool for a few minutes before entering.

Oil Beats The Heat

Motor oil does more than lubricate an engine's moving parts. It also plays a significant role in helping beat summer heat. As oil coats hot engine parts, it absorbs heat caused by friction and combustion. When the oil drains to the bottom of the engine, the heat is dissipated by air flowing under the car. Maintaining a proper level of fresh oil is essential to protect a car's vital components.

Windshield Replacement: What You Should Know

(NAPS)—The most important thing you should know about windshield repairs is not to rush the shop that is doing the repairs.

The reason?
The adhesive being used has to seal properly.

This curing process is also called drying and setting. Experts at LYNX Services from PPG, a network of glass repair shops known for its high standards, point out that vehicles containing newly installed windshield replacement glass should not be driven before the adhesive has fully cured. That's because if a vehicle with replacement glass sealant that is not fully cured is involved in a front-end collision or roll-over accident, the windshield's ability to remain in its framed opening is greatly reduced.

Aside from giving the repair shop the time it needs for the adhesive to dry, here are some additional tips to think about after you have picked up your car with its new windshield just installed.

• Do not slam doors with all the windows closed.

• Do not put the vehicle through an automatic car wash for 24 hours following installation.

• Avoid the use of glass cleaners containing ammonia or alcohol for the first 48 hours following the installation.

• Limit your driving the first 24 hours after the installation.

A Thought For The Week

Mother's Day is rightfully one of our most significant, sentimental days of the year. It is a day especially set aside to be thankful for her devotion; a special day to express love and gratitude to her...

Many artists, writers, poets, politicians, heads of nations and other prominently praised their mother. Read some of these quotes for example:

"The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." - Wm. Stewart. Ross Napoleon, when asked what was the greatest need of France, replied, "Mothers." Theodore Roosevelt said, "The mother is the one supreme asset of American life. She is more important by far than the successful businessman or artist or scientist." Lincoln gave his mother credit for all that he ever was or hoped to become...

Countless other quotes could be mentioned... With it all, we sincerely hope all mothers everywhere share a delightfully happy Mother's Day...

Housing Affordability Meeting At St. Ann's School Saturday

Residents of Wollaston Manor and Granite Place are invited to attend a meeting at 11 a.m. Saturday, May 8, at St. Ann's School to discuss affordability of housing.

The meeting is sponsored by the Mass. Alliance of HUD Tenants.

Although there is no immediate danger of housing costs escalating at these two developments, developers who built housing with HUD-subsidized mortgages are nearing the end of their agreements or are prepaying their mortgages, thus becoming able to raise rents.

Ward 3 Councillor Patrick McDermott said the meeting is an opportunity for the St. Ann's Parish Council and for residents to take a proactive approach to this issue.

HOCUS-FOCUS

BY HENRY BOLTMOFF

Find at least six differences in details between panels.

CRITIC'S CORNER

SHORT TAKES
THE CORRUPTOR: Ever since Brat Lee burst onto the scene as a master of Western arts and star of television and film, it seems the public can't get enough of those chop-kill movies! This is yet another one. Chow Yun Fat teams with Mark Wahlberg as two police partners who are complete opposites of each other. However, their relationship takes a strange turn when each saves the other's life. Rated R. **

THE DEEP END OF THE OCEAN: Milk cartoons are rife with pictures of missing children, many of whom have been lost for years. It's an American tragedy. In this fine flick, Michelle Pfeiffer stars as the mother of a child who's been gone for 10 years. Suddenly, the boy reappears. However, all is not as joyous as you'd expect. Rated PG. **

DOUG'S 1ST MOVIE: Yes, this is the Doug of animated TV fame. It's brought to us by Walt Disney. However, it's not up to Disney's usual fine standards for such fare. The flick follows the adventures of Doug and his friends, along with a friendly monster. Rated G. **

THE KING AND I: You knew it had to happen. This is the animated version of the Rodgers and Hammerstein classic. Some unfortunate liberties are taken with the script, and the animation isn't quite up to snuff. However, the music alone is worth the trip to the theater (Broadway star Martin Vidmar voices the King). Rated G. **

THE MATRIX: Ask your kids. They'll tell you: Computers rule! In this fun movie, Keanu Reeves stars as an electronics whiz kid who's entrapped in a world of virtual reality. His mission: To fight the forces of artificially intelligent computers whose mission is to take over the world from us mere mortals. Rated R. **

Your Horoscope by Natasha

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Physical things seem much more attractive than they had previously. It is not that the world has changed, but that you are looking at it in a different way.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Take a minor risk to make life a little more interesting. "Minor" is the key word though; gamble with your laundry money instead of your savings account.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You find yourself speaking and moving with unusual grace and panache. People who have ignored you in the past suddenly look upon you with interest.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Bypass the quick fix and follow the proven method to success. Although the story of the tortoise and the hare is a bit cliché, it is something you'd do well to remember.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Censor your words and cloak your emotions in order to increase the comfort of people around you. A fiery outburst may intimidate people.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) It is not always possible for everyone in your vicinity to be happy, and you shouldn't try to make them so. Instead, make yourself happy - within reason, of course.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Your subtle touch can turn a faulty and unreliable process into a smooth, ultra-efficient mechanism. Show other people the value of organization.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You are on some very tight timelines, and cannot afford the luxury of simply walking away from things that bother you. If you cannot ask others for help, at least don't chase them away.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Allow everyone into your social circle for a change. You usually keep it exclusive, but you may enjoy the energy which new people can bring to the table.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Nostalgia sets in and transforms you into a weepy sentimentalist. Go dig up the old pictures and love notes - you'll probably laugh at yourself through your tears.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) You have settled into an extremely comfortable spot, and you are prepared to remain there for a while. Enjoy the good things you have, but don't expect perfection.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Learn to distinguish the things that you really need from the things that you want. Of course it's hard to tell, but you haven't even pondered the question for a while.

YOU BORN THIS WEEK - Resourceful and determined, you never let anything stand in your way for long. You know how to go with the flow of life - and at which point to break free. People look to you for leadership, but very few understand the depth of your emotions or the strength of your will.

Seeks Alternate Funds

Sheets Optimistic On Hospital

By MARILYN JACKSON

Mayor James Sheets has a single focus: Find the funds necessary to secure an affiliation for Quincy Hospital with Boston Medical Center.

Although he is disappointed that a late-filed amendment to the state's $22.8 billion budget was defeated, Sheets said he is optimistic in securing funds from both state and federal sources.

Sheets says the city will have to pump $33 million into the hospital during the next seven years to make the agreement viable for the Boston Medical Center.

Two weeks ago state Rep. Stephen Tobin filed a budget amendment seeking $12.1 million to help finance the hospital debt which would have made the affiliation more attractive to Boston Medical Center.

"We're working very much with BMC, and we're deeply involved in negotiations, trying to get all the figures in place," Sheets said Tuesday.

"We've got to move toward the home rule petition, and discussions have been opened between the hospital and the labor unions.

"We are following the schedule we have outlined," said Sheets.

"The only difference is that I will not be sending any of the appropriations for the hospital to the City Council when I submit the budget for fiscal year 2000," he said.

"I am going to wait until we find out what kind of assistance we will receive from the federal government and from the state, then send all the financial information together.

"I had hoped to have it by now," he said, adding that he would include the appropriation requests in a supplemental budget.

Meanwhile, Sheets tentatively had planned to return to Washington yesterday (Wednesday) to continue conversations he had last week. "I touched base with high ranking officials in the Department of Health and Human Services, with Reps. William Delahunt and J. Joseph Moakley and with Sen. [John] Kerry, as well as Gerry Kavanaugh, Sen. [Edward] Kennedy's chief of staff.

"Within the state, I've spoken with Secretary of Administration and Finance

Point Webster: A Middle School For The 21st Century

By MARILYN JACKSON

Slowly, surely, contractors are transforming the Daniel Webster Elementary School and the Quincy Point Junior High School into a state-of-the-art middle school ready for the 21st century.

The school, to be known as the Point Webster Middle School, will be the city's fifth middle school when it opens in September. The $7 million retrofit is part of a comprehensive $73 million, 12-year capital plan for school improvements throughout the city. Some $42 million has been earmarked for land acquisition and for construction of a new comprehensive high school.

The new Point Webster will provide 22 regular classrooms and seven smaller classrooms, which will be used for classes for ESL (English as a second language), special needs and Title I as well as a student publications center and a parent reception area.

Already Point Webster has a new roof, and workmen have repointed the brick exterior. On Monday, beneath the warm spring sunshine, they were sealing the surface.

Mayor James Sheets visited the school Monday to survey its progress. Accompanying him were alumni of Quincy Point Junior High — state Rep. Ronald Mariano; Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi; assistant school superintendent Richard DiCristofaro, James McGuire, the principal of the new school, and Rosemary Nolan, program manager for the public works department.

Mariano, who grew up just two doors away, said he not only attended the junior high but was enrolled at the Daniel Webster for the first six grades. In addition, he taught social studies at Quincy Point for three years.

Nolan recalled working in the cafeteria during her junior high years in exchange for a free lunch. Six years ago, she helped organize the first Quincy Point

Fire Dept. Trust Fund Will Honor Scaffolding Victims

By MARILYN JACKSON

Shane McGettigan and Ronan Stewart, the two young Irishmen who were killed in a tragic construction accident last August when the scaffolding at 77 Adams Place collapsed, will be forever remembered through a trust fund established within the Quincy Fire Department.

"Their names won't vanish," vowed Fire Chief Thomas Gorman. "This trust fund will live on," said Gorman who Tuesday accepted a check for $5,000 from James Gallagher and Noel Murphy, president and treasurer respectively of the Leitrim Society of Boston, and Patrick Bligh of Dedham, who was representing

St. Patrick's Football Club which Shane had joined.

Gorman said the funds would be used for the fire department's SAFE (Student Awareness of Fire Education) program, which teaches all Quincy youngsters in kindergarten through grade 5 about the dangers of fire and other safety hazards.

Gallagher said memorial donations flooded into the Leitrim Society and St. Patrick's Football Club from all over the United States and it was the families of the two men who requested that $5,000 be donated to the Quincy Fire Department.

Thanking the gentlemen and the McGettigan and Stewart families, Mayor James Sheets said the gift demonstrated "a tremendous act of compassion to make this money available to educate young people about the dangers they face."

He said he appreciated the gesture of love and friendship, of "hands [reaching out] across the ocean."

Sheets also praised the firefighters who worked under dangerous circumstances to free the two men from the rubble, not knowing whether the remaining scaffolding would collapse on them.

He said all the rescue workers and others at the scene sensed that tragedy but could not feel the devastating sorrow of the McGettigan and Stewart families.

Gorman said that every resource available to the Quincy fire department was put in use Aug. 13 in a united effort to rescue the two men. In addition, the Boston Fire Department, medical personnel, the Quincy police and the public works department collaborated in the rescue.

THE SUM OF THE PARTS

Drivers in this country are involved in some 35 million vehicle accidents each year. These accidents result in an annual outlay of about $9 billion in replacement parts, most of which are these are original equipment, manufacturer (OEM) parts that exactly duplicate the original equipment found on the vehicle, others are imitation parts. The primary benefit of imitation parts is that they cost less than OEM parts, and thus encourage competitive pricing. On the other hand, an inexpensive part represents a risk to the vehicle owner should bear this in mind when dealing with insurers and repair technicians after an accident.

CVS Gets Green Light On Southern Artery

With hardly any discussion, the City Council Monday night approved granting a special permit for the CVS Corporation of Woonsocket, R.I., to build a sixth store in Quincy.

The site is the former Quincy Lumber Company site on Southern Artery.

The City Council, as the special permit granting authority, had held a joint hearing on the proposal with the planning board in early March.

On Monday, the councillors approved the CVS project, which calls for constructing a one-and-a-half story, 12,150-square-foot building, with two drive-throughs. CVS also will provide 99 parking spaces on the 2.3 acres of the site.

The building will have a

New England look, with weathered wood siding and columns of brick and granite. The roof will have cedar-looking roof shingles, topped with a cupola and nautical weather vane.

After Monday's hearing, Dominic Schiavone, a real estate manager for CVS, said he still needs to secure a couple of engineering permits before CVS buys the 5-acre site, which he hopes to accomplish by July 1.

If everything follows according to schedule, the new facility would open in October or November. At that time, the CVS store across the street would be closed.

In entering a purchase-and-sale agreement with the heirs of Eleanor Cottle, CVS agreed to acquire the entire parcel, which includes the historic Souther Tide Mill. The 3.5 acres of undeveloped land is to be deeded to a non-profit 501(c)(3) corporation that would preserve and maintain the mill and any other buildings constructed on the site.

The non-profit is to be designated by the mayor within three years.

In issuing the permit, the City Council is requiring the developer to mitigate several traffic problems in the area.

CVS has agreed to design and reconstruct the intersection of Southern Artery and Pond Street, where the primary entrance to the store will intersect. CVS also has agreed to design the coordinated signal system from the Sea Street-Coddington Street intersection to Cove Way and purchase the master controller.

And, CVS has agreed to provide $50,000 for a traffic signal at the Southern Artery-River Way-Cove Way intersection.

Abandoned Shopping Carts Council Issue

Abandoned shopping carts are creating a neighborhood blight, says Ward 3 Councillor Patrick McDermott, and he wants to see something done about it.

But at an oversight committee meeting of the City Council, McDermott was taken to task by several fellow councillors.

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi said he found the subject "distasteful."

Many agreed that the elderly and members of the Asian community often are the individuals who use the shopping carts to carry the groceries home and leave them on the sidewalk.

Last month, after a recent walk around his neighborhood during which he spied 27 abandoned carts, McDermott proposed creating a city-sponsored program through the public works department to remove and dispose of the carts.

He also suggested creating an ordinance prohibiting the removal of the carts which would carry a fine on the retail establishment and on the individual who removes the cart.

A special license could be issued by the license board which a retail operation could obtain if it chooses to allow shopping carts outside its premises.

No Mayoral Bid For Cahill

There's some speculation sprouting along the local political front that Councillor Tim Cahill is thinking of taking on Mayor James Sheets this year.

"Not true," says Cahill. "I have no intention of running for mayor this year—unless Jim Sheets steps down and I don't think that is going to happen."

Sheets will be seeking his sixth term and is still rolling along in high gear. Still strong and popular enough, most agree, that only a political fool would consider running against him.

"I am not going to challenge him," says Cahill. "I really don't see any reason for the city to change horses in mid-stream. I don't think I—or anyone else—could add anything more than to what he is doing now as mayor."

Cahill almost ran against Sheets four years ago and that might be the reason some think he will do it this year.

"I really don't have a burning desire at the moment to be mayor," says Cahill. "I am very happy with what I am doing."

Cahill is in his third year as Norfolk County treasurer. The county, he feels, has been turned around and is now in excellent financial shape.

"It is probably the strongest county in the state," he says. "And you don't hear any talk about abolishing it."

But he still has thoughts about running for mayor and says two years from now—2,001—might be the right time.

Meanwhile, he is running for a seventh term in the City Council.

"And that is definitely true," he says.

CONGRESSMAN Bill Delahunt is going to retire—some day. And, when he does call it a political career, he would like to try a new one: teaching.

Delahunt attended the recent 40th anniversary reunion of his Thayer Academy class of 1959. He confided to classmates that when he does retire he would like to teach at the Harvard Kennedy School of Government or Middlebury College, his alma mater.

He was presented an achievement award at the reunion in recognition of his public service which spans 27 years, including state representative, Norfolk County district attorney and now, Congressman.

Delahunt's political career goes back to 1971 when he won the Ward 5 City Council seat defeating Warren Powers, who is now a judge. Powers won the seat two years later after Delahunt left to become district attorney.

JACK RAYMER, former Quincy High School head football coach, apparently can't stay away from the game.

Raymer is now assistant coach at Stonehill College where he just finished up the Spring season and is looking ahead to the Fall.

"Stonehill is now in Division 2 and we have some good games coming up," he says.

Among them is one with AIC, alma mater of his good friend, John "Butch" Mahoney.

Stonehill's new head coach is Rich Beale of Hingham who was assistant coach at Tufts.

Although coaching at Stonehill, Raymer is still teaching at Quincy High School.

Someone asked if he would be interested in the North Quincy head football coaching job that Ken McPhee has left to head up security in the Quincy public schools.

"No," laughs Raymer. "But wouldn't that be something—me at North Quincy!"

Kolson described Duehay, who is stepping down from office after a long career, as a remarkable public servant.

Councillor Frank McCauley, who saw the photo, quipped at the end of a council meeting: "You keep some pretty high-level company, Peter."

MILESTONE: Former School Committeeman Charles Sweeny and his better half, Betty, are celebrating their 58th wedding anniversary. Charlie, the ever romantic, gave her a special remembrance for each of the 58 years. (You can ask him when you see him.)

The guys he walks with mornings at the Plaza had their own idea for a present for Betty: after 58 years, a Purple Heart. (Only kidding, Charlie. I think.)

Happy anniversary, kids!

YOU KIND OF take your barber for granted. You know, he's always going to be there when you need a haircut.

Then, one day he tells you he is retiring and it comes as a bit of a jolt. Like having your doctor or dentist tell you he or she is retiring.

Nick Mastrocola who has been cutting hair for 44 years, including mine for a good part of that time, retired to Mashpee the other day with his wife, Phyllis.

Nick came to this country from Italy as a youngster in 1955 and began his tonsorial career at Joe Angelo's barbershop at Hancock and Temple Sts. Joe taught him well.

Since 1975, Nick and Joe Avitable, who is not retiring, have been partners in the Men's Hi Style Salon on Revere Rd. His wife had a tailoring shop next door.

Nick really doesn't look old enough to even think of retiring but decided the time had come.

So, happy retirement, Nick. Gonna miss you.

A Thank You From Morgan Memorial

Editor, The Quincy Sun: The residents of the Quincy area have made a significant difference in the lives of many people by generously donating clothing and household goods to Morgan Memorial Industries' donation center.

In 1998, 542,700 pounds of textiles were collected at the Quincy site -- making it the most successful year to date.

Residents also donated significant amounts of household items. Many residents may not know that Goodwill needs items such as books, small working appliances, linens, housewares and toys. They are important to us and we encourage more supporters to make these donations.

I would like to extend my heartfelt thanks to our many local supporters. People with disabilities or who face other barriers to employment learn valuable job skills by processing donated goods and working in our 12 stores. Goodwill donates a portion of these goods to community agencies such as battered women's shelters and early reading programs to support their important programs. As a result,

Goodwill and its donors enable individuals from all walks of life to have access to high quality goods at affordable prices, with sales revenue going back to fund Goodwill's job training, youth services and community outreach programs.

Thank you to all the residents and neighbors of the Quincy area who have generously contributed. For those who have not, please consider visiting your local Goodwill donation center at The Goodwill Store Parking Lot on Parking Way in Quincy, open daily, 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

For more information about Goodwill's donation services, call 1-888-828-GIVE.

18-Cent Wage Increase Averts Shipyard Strike

By PAUL HAROLD

The threatened strike against Fore River and other East Coast yards owned by Bethlehem Steel, was called off after an apparent agreement between the unions and the company.

Arthur Boyson, president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers C.I.O. at Fore River, called for a meeting at 2:30 p.m. at the Quincy stadium for workers to ratify the agreement that increased wages by 18 cents an hour. The raise was retroactive to December 1945. Additionally, the union vowed no strikes during the term of the contract, while the company pledged no lockouts and no wage cuts.

ATTEMPTED RAIL DERAILMENT INVESTIGATED

Quincy and the railroad police investigated an attempt to derail a Boston bound train, halfway between the Quincy Adams and Quincy stations (near Leavens Furniture). Police Lt. Walter Kemp was heading up the investigation.

The train engineer reported that the locomotive struck an obstruction, that turned out to be a ladder laid across the track. Police discounted reports that boys were involved since the weight of the ladder required 4-6 grown men to carry it.

GROWING RAT POPULATION CITED

Health Commissioner Dr. Richard Ash renewed his call for the construction of an incinerator, citing the growing rat population in the city.

In a meeting with Mayor Charles Ross, Ash said, "It is evident that there are certain sections in Quincy that require immediate rate control measures."

The mayor pledged his full support and called on every citizen to co-operate with the program.

Correction

There was a misspelled word in the caption under the photo of the National Sailors Home in the Scenes From Yesterday in last week's Quincy Sun.

One of the sentences should have read: The rest-home was opened shortly after the Civil War and served indigent U.S. Navy veterans for over 50 years.

We thank the readers who called the error to our attention.

'The Odd Couple -- Female!' At ENC Fine Arts Center

The Communications Department of Eastern Nazarene College will present "The Odd Couple - Female!" Thursday, May 20 through Saturday, May 22 at 7 p.m. in the Cove Fine Arts Center at ENC.

"The Odd Couple - Female!", a witty gender reversal of Neil Simon's 1965 classic comedy of stage, will delight audiences with its unusual twists on familiar characters and situations. Dysfunctional and reluctant roommates "Florence" Unger and "Olive" Madison, both in exile from failed marriages are indeed an odd couple.

Florence is compulsively neat, Olive is a slob. Together they're attempting to rebuild their lives, find romance, and keep from hurting each other in their all-too-cramped apartment set in 1980s Upper West Side New York City.

All the beloved characters are here, just with different chromosomes: Murray the cop becomes "Mickey" the policeman, who joins Florence and Olive for weekly Trivial Pursuit games instead of poker; the giggly English Pigeon sisters, Oscar and Felix's disastrous dates become the Costazuela brothers. Miscommunication, malapropisms and mayhem ensue when the brothers, fresh from Corsica, come to call.

All tickets are $7 and can be ordered by credit card by calling the box office at 617-745-3715 or by writing to Eastern Nazarene College, Department of Communication Arts, 23 East Elm Ave., Quincy, MA 02170.

For more information, call the box office.

A school matinee is scheduled at 10 a.m. on Thursday, May 20 for middle and high school students.

Morgan Sisters Concert Sunday At Fort Square Presbyterian Church

Myrna and Gisela Morgan will sing in concert in the sanctuary at Fort Square Presbyterian Church, 22 Pleasant St., Quincy, Sunday, May 16 at 6:30 p.m.

The Morgan Sisters repertoire covers inspirational songs from traditional hymns to contemporary gospel. Ministering throughout the Eastern United States and the West Indies, they have dedicated their lives to share the gospel in song to edify God's people and minister to the needy.

Their performances have spanned the full range of audiences from small groups and nursing homes to appearances in the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis and the Alamodome in Texas.

At two years of age, the Morgan Sisters began singing in their father's church in the West Indies, and continued their music ministry as the family moved to Kissimmee, Florida and eventually to Boston following their high school graduation in 1989.

Myrna and Gisela continued their education at Eastern Nazarene College as they completed courses in communication and a music minor. In 1997 they released their first full-length album, "Praise Hymn" and are presently working on two other albums to be released in 1999.

In the future, they intend to expand their ministry to reach out with their music throughout the world to encourage and strengthen the people of God, to see people healed and delivered from bondage, and most of all to see their music help people to come to Christ.

All are welcome to attend the free gospel concert.

For more information, call Rev. Richard Brondyke at (617) 471-6806. A free-will offering will be taken.

Holland's estranged husband has been charged with her murder.

Hospital Unions Want Sheets Role In Home Rule Petition

Representatives of the unions at Quincy Hospital have asked Mayor James Sheets to play a role in drafting the home rule petition to allow the hospital to affiliate with Boston Medical Center.

The City Council is expected to act on a home rule petition by June 7 but may do so May 27, according to Council President Peter Kolson.

Five different unions are employed at the hospital —

District 925 and Local 285 of the Service Employees International Union (SEIU), the National Association of Government Employees, the Massachusetts Nurses Association and the Laborers' International Union.

In a letter to Mayor James Sheets last week, the union coalition of Quincy Hospital said it was troubled that he had intimated that the union members would be held responsible if the affiliation is not consummated.

"We want to assure you that the coalition supports the proposed affiliation with BMC, and we will work positively toward that goal," the coalition members wrote.

They also underscored the city's legal obligations to honor the contracts and the successor language of the contracts and reaffirmed their commitment to continue to provide high quality healthcare to the Quincy Hospital community.

We're Still Angry!

Quincy Teachers: 255 days without a contract

Did you know?

Quincy's teachers overwhelmingly rejected the last School Committee offer. It didn't come close.

The offer did not make us comparative to our colleagues in neighboring communities. The City's offer was meager on paper, and poorer in actuality.

Quincy's teachers are saying that we demand to be paid as our colleagues are in the area. We still say that. And we mean it.

In the 80's the City needed our money to pay for a crane. Now the City needs our money to bail out a hospital. The City has money for a beach. The City has money for a crypt. We are tired of subsidizing the City's errors.

Quincy offer	Braintree

diff. worsens	1998-9 = $1276
diff. worsens	1999-00 = $1250
diff. worsens	2000-01 = $1051

As you can see, Quincy lags.

Quincy offer	Braintree

diff. worsens	1998-9 = $4787
diff. worsens	1999-00 = $5306
diff. worsens	2000-01 = $5411

As you can see, the "gap" widens.

We're asking Quincy to pay its teachers the going rate.

Veteran's Memorial Flags Sought For Flag Day Parade

The Quincy Flag Day Parade Committee, in partnership with Keohane Funeral Homes, are seeking veteran's memorial flags for this year's Flag Day Parade.

The committee will again honor deceased veterans with a float in the parade carrying the veteran's memorial flags. Last year, more than 125 veteran's memorial flags were displayed as part of this program.

Flags may be dropped off at the Keohane Funeral Home, 785 Hancock St., Wollaston before June 10. Each flag will have the veteran's name attached and will be placed on a special float in the parade.

The 48th annual Flag Day Parade and Celebration will be held Saturday June 12. The parade will begin at 7 p.m.

The parade route will be: Coddington St. to Hancock St.; north on Hancock to Merrymount Parkway, ending at Adams Field.

Following the parade, there will be a flag-raising ceremony, featuring the Boston Crusaders and the raising of the 45 foot by 90 foot Mount Rushmore flag. At the conclusion of the ceremony, there will be a fireworks display over Black's Creek.

"The Veteran's Memorial Flag program allows the Flag Day Committee to honor those who have served to protect and honor the flag which we celebrate. It is our way of showing an appreciation for the sacrifices that people have made to protect our flag and all that it represents," said Ed Keohane, co-chairman of the Flag Day Committee and proprietor of Keohane Funeral Home.

Jim Stamos Candidate For Ward 6 Council Seat

Jim Stamos, a realtor and who has been active in the community, this week became the fourth contender for the open Ward 6 City Council seat.

Stamos, a resident of Sonoma Rd., Squantum, in announcing his candidacy said he plans a whistle stop campaign tour of Ward 6 Saturday, May 22 to meet residents of that ward.

In announcing his candidacy, he said he is running for the seat, "Because I care. I want to be as effective as I can in my concern for the present and future of Ward 6 and the city of Quincy.

"I have always been involved in and concerned about issues affecting our neighborhoods, public safety, affordable housing, youth activities, senior services, taxes and quality of life.

"These are the backbone of general well being within the community. Issues that impact the individual and, therefore, our community as a whole, are of great concern to me. Among these issues are preservation of open space and preservation of our great historical city for future generations. These issues must be balanced with progress.

"I am not the new guy on the block. I have been involved in civic affairs for most of my life. I will always be accessible to the community I serve."

Stamos cited as among his involvements in the community:

Past president of the Squantum Community Association, past chairman of the Squantum Youth Committee, volunteer for Cleaner, Greener Quincy, member of the "Save Moon Island" committee, past board member of Quincy Community Action Organization, past president of South Shore Association of Realtors, member of the Quincy Citizens Committee, member South Shore Chamber of commerce and the Ward 6 Democratic Committee.

Stamos and his wife, Marie, are parents of four children and own Stamos and Stamos Realtors. As a principal of the company, Stamos says he knows how to be fiscally responsible and balance a budget.

Prior to going into the real estate business, Stamos was a postal employee and a steward in the Letter Carrier's Union, NALC, Branch 34.

Stamos noted he has been attending City Council, Conservation Commission, Planning Board, License Board and Zoning Board of Appeals meetings and public hearings.

Bruce Ayers, now a state representative, is completing his Ward 6 council term at the end of the year and not seeking re-election.

South Shore Chamber Aiding Kosovo Refugees

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce has formed a foundation to provide aid to relief agencies working directly with Albanian refugees from Kosovo.

Ronald Zooleck, president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, recently returned from Albania where he delivered a shipment of food and relief supplies to refugee camps.

"This is not about politics or ethnicity or religion or land," he said. "It is about people in need."

"It is about hundreds of thousands of people who have seen hell, who have been shot or shot at, who have seen their fathers and husband and sons slaughtered. It is about families that have been burned out of their homes and herded out of their country like cattle."

Zooleck, whose father emigrated from Albania to the United States, first visited the area before the current flood of refugees began.

"The country's only major airport in Tirana is separated from the border by more than 100 miles of mountains and poor roads. The only way to airlift supplies to the refugee camps is by helicopter, and they can only carry so much. Large trucks can't make it on the narrow mountain roads," he said.

Among the sponsors of the fund-raising project are Anthony Athanas of Anthony's Pier 4, developers Thomas Flatley and Peter O'Connell, Dusty Rhodes of Conventures. Businesses which have joined the relief effort include Citizens Bank, BankBoston, Wear-Guard, Building #19, U.S. Sens. Edward Kennedy and John Kerry and Reps. William Delahunt and J. Joseph Moakley also have endorsed the project.

A major fund-raiser will be held from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. Monday, June 14, at Anthony's Pier 4. Contributions may be sent to Kosovo Refugees Fund, in care of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce Foundation, P.O. Box 690625, Quincy, MA 02269.

Foot & Notes

by Dr. Richard A. Hacker
Surgeon-Podiatrist

SHOULD YOUR CHILD SEE A PODIATRIST?

Young children's feet often podiatrist to rule out hidden problems.

While usually there is no cause for worry, there are some signs that might make an examination by a podiatrist a wise decision. Mild in-toeing and out-toeing is common in toddlers; if it is excessive, have it checked. High arches are not developmentally normal and should be examined. Deformities of the toes, such as overlapping, should be corrected before they cause problems. Suspicious lumps should always be investigated. If your child's shoe wear is abnormal or excessive, that may also signal a problem. Nighttime cramps in the feet and legs are common and usually caused by overtired muscles, but if the problem is frequent, see the PS: Most children are mildly bowlegged up to age two; knock-knees are common from ages three to seven. Most often, these problems resolve themselves before adulthood.

Quincy Kiwanis Celebrates 75th Anniversary

The Kiwanis Club of Quincy recently celebrated its 75th anniversary with more than 120 invited guests, Kiwanians, family and friends at the gala dinner at the Neighborhood Club.

The program was highlighted with two major donations to worthy charitable causes, and the recognition of six Quincy Kiwanians for longtime service to the club.

Mayor James Sheets proclaimed April 23, 1999 as "Kiwanis Day in Quincy," marking the 75th anniversary to the day that the local Kiwanis club was founded. The club, which has been providing community service and helping underprivileged children since its inception, was chartered on April 23, 1924.

Past New England District Kiwanis Governor James Levesque was the keynote speaker. Levesque, who also served as an International Trustee and is a former executive director of the Kiwanis Foundation of New England, was introduced by Distinguished Past President and Anniversary Chairman Richard T. Sweeney, Jr., who served as master of ceremonies for the evening.

Levesque praised Quincy Kiwanis for making Quincy a better place to live and work.

"Seventy-five years of service to the City of Quincy is an extraordinary contribution, for the betterment of the community, by many dedicated men and women who chose to 'give something back' to their community. To make Quincy a better place to live and work, to help our children, the elderly, the less fortunate. What better way to give something back than to create the opportunity for men and women to provide significant community service," Levesque said.

"Quincy Kiwanis has grown as the community has grown. Like all Kiwanis clubs it was founded to help their community, and for many years they have done this, with a myriad of programs for children, the elderly... But, as Kiwanis had redefined 'community,'" Levesque continued, "Quincy has been ready and able to change."

For example, Levesque noted Quincy Kiwanis has been a leader in the support of the Kiwanis Pediatric Trauma Institute (KPTI) which was created in the early 1980's to focus the attention of the medical world on pediatric trauma, to look into causes and cures for accidental injury, and to develop the first research program to improve the outcome of these accidents.

"In addition, we wanted to focus the community on the need for accident prevention programs; to seek to eliminate the most common causes of such injuries, to teach seatbelt safety, bicycle safety, and to make children, parents and the community aware of these problems," Levesque said.

"Once again, Quincy Kiwanians have led the way. You are the only Kiwanis club to exceed the amazing goal of $100,000 in contributions to KPTI. A truly remarkable achievement, of club, individual, and community contributions. At the same time you have consistently run an outstanding 'Kiwanis Family Safety Day' in Quincy, teaching children the proper way to maintain and ride a bicycle, and providing safe helmets for hundreds of children. All of this without decreasing mental retardation. A mere 5 cents of iodine provides enough iodine to save one person.

Levesque said Quincy Kiwanians are also committed to helping to save the lives of 1.5 billion women and children around the world from the horrors of Iodine Deficiency Disorders. IDD is the world's single largest cause of preventable mental retardation. A mere 5 cents of iodine provides enough iodine to save one person.

Kiwanis International has pledged to raise $75 million to rid the world of IDD. "We're half-way there—we have raised $36 million and are on the last push to meet our original goal: Eliminate IDD by the year 2000. We can and we will make it happen."

In support of KPTI and IDD, Quincy Kiwanis presented two checks, totaling $5,000, to benefit these programs.

A $2,500 donation was presented to Dr. Neil Feins of the Kiwanis Pediatric Trauma Institute by Quincy Kiwanis Club President Robert Bosworth, and Past President Paul Ricciardi.

Since 1981, the Quincy Kiwanis Club and individual members have donated $105,700 to the Kiwanis Pediatric Trauma Institute.

In addition to the KPTI contribution, an additional $2,500 donation was presented in support of IDD, Kiwanis International's Worldwide Service Project. The donation will provide enough salt or iodine to save 50,000 children from mental retardation.

Quincy Kiwanis IDD Chairperson Nadine Pfautz and Bosworth presented the IDD check to Dr. Bernard Poller, district chairman for the Kiwanis International Foundation. In return, Dr. Poller presented the Quincy club a "Tablet of Honor" plaque which recognizes the memories of all deceased Quincy Kiwanians "who helped build our community and served the city and its Kiwanis club with distinction."

Other presentations and remarks also highlighted the occasion.

Six Quincy Kiwanians were presented with Legion of Honor certificates representing an aggregate total of 180 years of service and membership to the local service club. Those recognized, and the number of years they have been members of the Quincy Kiwanis Club, are:

Past President Elmer K. (Mike) Fagerlund (50 years); Treasurer Emeritus Aldo M. Saluti, 30 years; Distinguished Past President Robert Bunstein, 25 years; Distinguished Past President John A. Farmer, 25 years; Past President Ron McKee, 25 years; and Allen Kelly, 25 years.

Presenting the Legion of Honor certificates was Immediate Past New England District Governor James A. Banks, Sr., a member of the Kiwanis Club of Portland, Maine.

Club Vice President Robert H. Bunstein was presented a Red Jacket from his parents, Distinguished Past President Robert Bunstein and his mother, Kathleen Bunstein, representing his support of the Kiwanis Foundation of New England. The club has 35 "Friends of the Foundation."

Former Mayor and City Councillor Frank McCauley presented the mayoral proclamation in behalf of Mayor James Sheets who was unable to attend. McCauley also presented a City Council commendation in honor of the club's distinguished service record over the past 75 years.

Rep. Bruce Ayers, who is also a member of the Quincy Kiwanis Club, brought greetings from the Massachusetts Legislature. Ayers presented a House of Representatives commendation in behalf of his Quincy colleagues, Rep. Ronald Mariano and Rep. Steve Tobin. He also presented a Senate citation in behalf of Senator Michael Morrissey.

Greetings from the New England District of Kiwanis was expressed by Governor-Elect Michael Kirchner, a member of the Sheffield Kiwanis, and Robert Haviland, Div. 17 lieutenant governor and a member of the Kiwanis Club of Hingham-Weymouth.

Club President Robert Bosworth told the guests that 75 years is an accomplishment that all Quincy Kiwanians can be proud of. He noted the first Kiwanis Club was founded in Detroit, Michigan, in 1915, just nine years before the Quincy Kiwanis Club was chartered.

"We can all feel a sense of tremendous pride on this wonderful occasion," Bosworth said. "The Quincy community is a better place to live, raise a family and work because of the community service Quincy Kiwanians have done over the past 75 years."

Since its inception, Quincy Kiwanis has helped build a better community through community service, sharing and giving. To date, the Club has expended more than $616,507 in charitable donations, campships, scholarships and countless other worthwhile causes. A prime focus of this funding has been helping underprivileged and needy children.

MAYOR TO MAYOR -- Councillor and former Mayor Francis McCauley presents a copy of a City Council resolution to Mayor James Sheets recognizing him as the city's longest serving mayor under the Plan A charter. The resolution, noting that as March 21, Sheets surpassed the nine years and 20 days served by the late Charles Ross, was introduced in the council by McCauley who himself served eight years as mayor.

Pond Restoration Efforts Ward 5 Topic

The Ward Five Community Association will conduct its monthly meeting tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. at the Beechwood Knoll School, Fenno Street.

Coffee will be served and all are welcome.

The topic will be the on-going restoration efforts at Sailor's Pond on Rice Road and Butler's Pond on Butler Road. Guest speakers will be: Rosemary Nolan of Quincy's Department of Public Works; Jon Twining, professor at Eastern Nazarene College' and several of Professor Twining's students from the Eastern Nazarene College.

Both ponds have been the focus of recent studies by Professor Twining's science classes. The two ponds have been studied, sampled, and tested by the students. They will share their findings and possible recommendations.

We could tell you South Shore Hospital nurses are great. But you say it better.

"I've been in many hospitals over the years; and I was so impressed by your nursing staff, such compassion and professionalism."

"I can't begin to put into words the outstanding involvement my mother's nurse showed to her. As a former nurse, my mother had tremendous respect for her and loved her dearly. Thank you for having the best available!"

"My nurses were kind, sympathetic to my pain and made sure that I understood what they were giving me or doing to me. South Shore Hospital has the best nurses around."

"My cardiac care unit nurses treated me like a king."

"Thanks to your first-rate nurses, my husband's life was saved. I can't thank you enough."

"My husband's Hospice nurses were exceptional in their professionalism, knowledge, and caring hearts. I really do not know what we would have done without them."

"My mother's nurses' professionalism, warmth, and caring attitude helped all of us feel comfortable at an extremely difficult time."

"My birthing unit nurse stayed with me throughout my recovery. Her kindness, attention, and understanding was incredibly comforting. By the time we left the recovery room, my husband and I felt a bond with her I really can't explain."

These quotes are from letters written by South Shore Hospital patients and families. They represent hundreds of letters, calls, and comments we receive each year about our outstanding nursing staff.

It's no wonder. Our nurses consistently earn high scores for skill, respect and overall care on patient satisfaction surveys. Many have additional certification in their areas of expertise, including emergency, mother-infant, cancer, geriatric, and wound care.

And at South Shore Hospital, all nursing care is provided by registered and licensed practical nurses.

To our nurses: during National Nurses' Week May 6-12, we join with our patients and community in thanking and honoring you for the outstanding care you provide all year long. You keep the "care" in "health care" for our community. You are simply the greatest.

Satisfy Your Lawn's Thirst Without Draining Free Time

Want to satisfy your lawn's thirst for water without draining your free time? It's simple, if you get to know a few basic rules and products.

The biggest watering myth is that lawns should be watered in the evening to avoid evaporation. In the Northeast, evening watering actually promotes moss growth and rot. Experts say the best time to water is very early in the morning.

You can even water your lawn from your bed with inexpensive water timers that attach to the top of the hose and turn on at your designated time. Automatic timers cost for $10 to $40 depending on the number of cycles and whether or not there is a digital display.

It's difficult to create a formula for how much is enough water, since Mother Nature plays an important role. To gauge your lawn's thirst, walk across the lawn and if you leave footprints, there's a good chance the grass needs water. New lawns and newly-seeded areas should be kept continually damp, but water should not puddle. If it does, you've watered too much or there are drainage problems.

Some lawn treatments will indicate the lawn should be watered a specific number of inches over time. A simple gauge for measuring how much you've watered is to place an empty tuna can in the area being water. Most tuna cans are one inch deep, so when the can is full, you know you've watered one inch. Know Your Hose
